who lived on the homestead, known for his good qualities of hand and heart, died unmarried at the age of seventy-four years; Nathaniel Woodhull, who died in middle life at Columbus, Ga.; Matthew Henry; John W. T., born Oct. 24, 1806, and died in 1870; Mary Brewster, married Henry F. Moffat, of Blooming-Grove; Andrew, died young; Gabriel, Simeon, and Andrew. Hezekiah Howell (3) added 200 acres of land to the homestead, and there died June 20, 1855. His wife died Dec. 14, 1830.

Matthew Henry was born Jan. 16, 1805, lives on part of the homestead, and follows agricultural pursuits. He married Julia S., daughter of Daniel Brewster, of Blooming-Grove, and of this union was born Nathaniel W.; Charles, deceased; Sarah, married William Clark, and resides in New York; and Joanna B., who died young.

Nathaniel W. Howell, grandson of Hezekiah (3), lives on 300 acres of the homestead, being the fifth generation. He married Mary, daughter of Walter Halsey, an old family of Blooming-Grove, and has two children,—Joanna B. and Hezekiah. Mr. Howell is an active man in his township, has represented it in the board of supervisors, and was member of Assembly from the First District of Orange County in the years 1863–64.

ALDEN GOLDSMITH.

His great-grandfather Thomas was one of five brothers who came from England and settled on Long Island early in the eighteenth century. He afterwards came to Orange County, and in 1735 bought a patent of land of 1000 acres for £200, the title coming from Queen Anne. Washingtonville is situated upon this patent, and a portion of the land has since passed to his lineal descendants, and been the homestead. His children were Elisha, Joshua, and Richard. Elisha married Sarah Dunning, of Orange County, and their children were Henry, father of our subject; John; Elisha; Charles; Matilda, married Peter Earle; Sally Ann, married Peter Larary; and Dicia, married James Kelso.

Henry Goldsmith was born in Blooming-Grove, on July 18, 1788. By inheritance and by purchase he came into possession of 200 acres of the homestead, and lived upon the same during his lifetime, following agricultural pursuits, and giving some attention to stock-raising. As a farmer he was successful, and as a man was highly respected and esteemed for his good social qualities. He married Fayette, daughter of Peter Moore, of Blooming-Grove, in 1815, and of this union was born, Adaline, who lives on the homestead; Ann Eliza, who married Edwin Hulse, and after his decease, Capt. Thomas N. Hulse, of Blooming-Grove; Alden; Henry M., resides in the West; Walter, who resides in Iowa; Mary L., died young; and Charles H., who died at the age of forty. Henry Goldsmith died April 10, 1875, in his eighty-seventh year. His wife Fayette died Dec. 2, 1835. After her decease he married Sarah Pelton.

Alden Goldsmith was born Dec. 4, 1820, on the homestead, and has always lived there, being the fourth generation. His education was obtained at the common schools. Having a natural love for stock, he early in life gave his attention to stock-raising. At first he was associated with his father in the raising of horses, sheep, and cattle, and afterwards confined himself more especially to the raising and development of blooded horses. The "Maid," trained and developed by him, has linked the name of its owner forever with the horse interests of the United States; afterwards the bringing out of such horses as "Glossier," "Huntress," "Powers," "Driver," and "Alley" have tended to make the name of Alden Goldsmith still more widely known. Indeed, the interest taken in the breeding of good horses, and the reputation which Orange County people sustain throughout the country as producers of good stock, is due more to Alden Goldsmith than any other man. For nineteen years he has owned the stallion "Volunteer," which is now acknowledged as the most prominent stock-horse in America. Mr. Goldsmith's dealings in horses have made his name indissolubly connected with the stock-growing interests of this country, and the "Walnut Grove Farm" of 200 acres is devoted by him exclusively to the raising of finely-bred horses.

While he has thus been interested in stock-raising, he has still kept up his interest in public matters. In 1858 he represented his town in the board of supervisors, as did he also from 1862 to 1868. He was a member of the finance committee of the county in the late war. For twenty years Mr. Goldsmith has been a director in the Quassaick Bank of Newburgh, and many times has been president of the Orange County Agricultural Society. In politics he was formerly a Whig, but has been identified with the Republican party from its formation, and was a delegate from Orange County to the memorable New York State Convention of 1855, held at Saratoga. He has since represented his party in her State conventions at different times. On Oct. 29, 1846, he married Catherine Cornell, daughter of James and Anna Townsend, of Hamptonburgh, and their children are James H., Annie S., and John Alden.

JESSE BULL.

Jesse Bull is a descendant in the fourth generation of William Bull, who was born in England in February, 1689, and sailed from Dublin, Ireland, to this country, and here died in 1755. He married Sarah Wells, who was the first white woman in Goshen township, and they were the first couple of white people that were married in Goshen. William Bull built the old stone house in Hamptonburgh often mentioned by historians as the scene of many noted events. In 1868 an appropriate monument was

Silas R. Horton

SILAS R. HORTON is a lineal descendant in the seventh generation of Barnabas Horton, who was born in Mousely, Leicestershire, England, July 13, 1600. He emigrated to America, in the ship "Swallow," in 1635, and landed at Hampton, Mass. In October, 1640, he settled at Southold, L. I., and there died, in July, 1680. His children were Joseph, Benjamin, Caleb, Joshua, Jonathan, Hannah, Sarah, Mary, Mercy, and Abigail. The old Horton homestead, erected by Barnabas Horton in 1660, at Southold, L. I., still remains standing, in a good state of preservation, and is, in all probability, the oldest wood house in America. Six generations bearing the Horton name have lived and died in this venerable building. James, the youngest son of Jonathan Horton, and one of eleven children, was the father of Silas, who settled on the old Horton homestead, in Goshen township (formerly), in the year 1750. Since that date the property has been owned by his lineal descendants. Silas Horton married Margaret Bull, and the children of this union were James, Silas, James (2), William, Anna, Margaret, and Sarah, all of whom died young except Sarah, who married David Hawkins, and William, the grandfather of our subject. He was born on the homestead, July 2, 1771, and followed agricultural pursuits during his life. On Dec. 23, 1793, he married Phebe, daughter of Phineas Rumsey, of Goshen, and their children were Sarah, died young; William; Margaret, born Oct. 4, 1797, died Jan. 15, 1817; and Charlotte, married Dr. Jerome Welles, and lives in Goshen, N. Y.

William Horton, M.D., was born in Goshen, N. Y., on the homestead, May 16, 1796. His early education was obtained at the schools in Goshen. At the age of eighteen he entered the junior class at Union College, from which institution he was graduated. After his collegiate course he studied medicine and attended medical lectures at the University of New York, during the palmy days of Mitchell and Hosack. He commenced the practice of his profession at the residence of his father, but soon afterwards moved to Goshen, where he continued the practice of medicine. He died on the homestead, Dec. 1, 1844, at the untimely age of forty-seven. In an obituary notice of Dr. William Horton, taken from the Goshen True Whig, we find the following: "He was a surgeon, but was still more celebrated as a physician. By his skill and honorable bearing he early secured the confidence of his medical brethren, and was frequently called in consultation with the aged and experienced physicians of his day. He was remarkably successful in the treatment of fevers, and prepared a work relative to them, which, however, was never published. His pamphlet on dysentery and his geological reports are his only published works, and these are sufficient to establish his reputation as a profound thinker and a clear and powerful writer. In the midst of his career of usefulness as a physician he turned his attention to the study of botany, mineralogy, and geology, and soon became one of the most noted men of his day in these sciences. His great delight in these studies led him, at the age of thirty-seven, to relinquish the practice of medicine and devote himself wholly to these sciences, and had he lived a few days longer he would have published a large work on these subjects. Dr Horton was always rigidly moral, and never sacrificed principle to expediency." He married, April 9, 1817, Maria Ryneck, of Schenectady, and their children are Silas Ryneck, who married Sarah Jane, daughter of Jacob J. Decker, of Ulster County, N. Y. He inherits something of his father's taste for geology and mineralogy, and a few years since discovered a new and rare mineral, which has since been named by Prof. George J. Brush, of Yale College, "Hortonolite;" Eugene, who married Anna T. Haley, and follows agricultural pursuits on the old homestead, being the fifth generation; William, a physician, at Craigville, N. Y.; Egbert, died young; Emily, married J. J. Dolson; Margaret, married S. W. Leddel; Charlotte, married Jesse E. Moffat; and Gertrude, married Brower C. Ward.

Anselm Helme

His grandfather, Anselm, was born on Long Island, July 8, 1750. In early life he was a sailor, but left the sea at the commencement of the Revolutionary war, and landing at Newport, R. I., came overland to Orange County, where, in 1776, he settled upon two hundred acres of land in Blooming-Grove, the farm now owned by Joel Coleman. He married Phoebe, daughter of Sylvanus White, of Blooming-Grove, Feb. 3, 1778. Their children were Ruth, married Samuel Denniston; Eunice, married Samuel Strong; Brewster; Phoebe, married Joseph Decker; Mary, married Apollos Halsey; Deborah, married Thomas Moffat; Nathan W.; and Joseph W.

Anselm Helme died Dec. 9, 1824. His wife died in 1833. Soon after his marriage he sold his original purchase, and bought about two hundred acres of land in Blooming-Grove, which has since been the homestead of his descendants.

He was considered a man of good judgment, and was appointed by the Legislature of New York State as a member of a committee to appraise the damages done by squatters to the government land at West Point. He was also a justice of the peace for many years.

Brewster Helme, the father of our subject, was born April 14, 1782. He married Experience, daughter of Samuel Strong, of Blooming-Grove, in the year 1807. He was a farmer by occupation, and always lived on the homestead. By his marriage he had two children,—Elizabeth (deceased, married Wm. H. Thompson, of Blooming-Grove) and Anselm. His death occurred Feb. 11, 1861.

Anselm Helme was born on the homestead, Jan. 6, 1817. His early life was spent on the farm and in the common school. He obtained the homestead by inheritance, and has always lived upon it as a farmer. Mr. Helme is not a man who courts public favor, but has always led an honest, quiet life. He is the last of his generation, and is esteemed by his neighbors as a good citizen. He and his family are attendants of the Congregational Church at Blooming-Grove.

On the 29th of March, 1849, he married Jane B., daughter of Dr. Samuel Warner, of Blooming-Grove, and their children are Arabella S., who lives at home; Anselm Winfield, who married Anna, daughter of Levi Benedict, of Cornwall, and lives adjoining the homestead; Mary Ann, died young; Irving, died young; and Mary E., who lives at home.

C. S. Marvin

CORTLAND S. MARVIN is a lineal descendant in the sixth generation of Matthew Marvin, who came from England in 1635, and was among the original settlers of Hartford, Conn.

His son Matthew, who was born in England in 1627, and came to this country with his parents, was the father of John Marvin, who was born in Connecticut, Sept. 2, 1678.

Elihu was the son of John, and was born Oct. 10, 1719. About the year 1743 he settled in Orange County upon two hundred acres of land, which has since been the Marvin homestead, being the place where C. S. Marvin now resides in Blooming-Grove. He married Abigail, daughter of John Yelverton, of Chester, and their children were Seth, Abigail (married Sheriff Jackson), Elihu, John Yelverton, Elizabeth (married John McDowell), Hannah (married John Hall), John (father of our subject), James, Kezia, and Anthony. Elihu Marvin died on the homestead, Aug. 11, 1803. He was a farmer by occupation, served in the Revolutionary war, and was one of the associate justices on the trial of Claudius Smith for the murder of Maj. Strong. John Marvin was born in Blooming-Grove, April 8, 1757. He married Fanny, daughter of Ebenezer Woodhull, May 1, 1797. Their children were John F., born Jan. 19, 1800, married Amelia, daughter of Stephen Jayne, of Florida, N. Y., died March 16, 1868; Caroline, born May 20, 1803, married Walter Halsey, of Blooming-Grove, and died Feb. 7, 1879; Van Rensselaer W., born March 9, 1805, married Juliana W., daughter of Judge Nathan White, and died Feb. 11, 1856; and Cortland S.

John Marvin lived on the homestead during his life, and there died June 23, 1809. His wife died April 7, 1857.

Cortland S. Marvin was born Dec. 11, 1807, at the home of his ancestors. He has always followed agricultural pursuits, and is a member of the Orange County Agricultural Society. Mr. Marvin has always led a quiet, unassuming life, and has never figured in public matters, with the exception of being commissioner of highways and assessor of his township.

As a farmer he has been successful, and as a man has borne a good reputation among his neighbors. In disposition he is genial and pleasant, and retains his faculties to quite a remarkable degree. In stature he is tall and well-proportioned, and is the last survivor of his generation. He and his family are attendants at the Blooming-Grove Congregational Church.

On Jan. 3, 1839, Mr. Marvin married Melissa, daughter of James and Mary (Heard) Duryea, of Blooming-Grove, and of this union was born one son, William H., who is a farmer on the homestead, being the fourth generation. He married Anna M., daughter of Josiah and Harriet (Tuttle) Seely, of Blooming-Grove. Mrs. C. S. Marvin died Feb. 25, 1871, in the sixty-third year of her age.

George Bush

erected over the remains of William Bull and his wife, near Hamptonburgh church, by his lineal descendants. Jesse's children were John; William; Sarah, married Charles Booth; Thomas; Isaac; Esther, married John Miller; Mary, married Benjamin Booth; Margaret, married Silas Horton; Catharine, became the wife of James Falkner; Ann, became the wife of William Eager; Richard; and Eleanor, who became the wife of Henry Weller.

John Bull was born May 3, 1721, on the Bull homestead in Hamptonburgh. He married Hannah Holly, of Goshen, N. Y., and lived and died at the place of his birth. His children were Ebenezer; Sarah, married Richard Earl; Elizabeth, married Peter Earl; Mary, married John Tuthill; William; Samuel; John; Richard; Daniel; Esther, married William Brush; and Crisse.

Richard was the father of Jesse Bull, and was born on the homestead Oct. 25, 1762. He married Lena, daughter of Benjamin Harlow, April 12, 1800, and soon afterwards settled in the Sugar-Loaf Valley, in Chester township. By occupation he was a farmer and miller. He died Jan. 5, 1846. Their children were Hannah (now deceased), married Joseph Ray; Jesse; James; Harvey; Daniel; Ira, who lives on the old homestead in Chester; and Charles W., deceased.

Jesse Bull was born in Chester, on the homestead, Dec. 27, 1802. His early life was spent at school, on his father's farm, and in his father's grist-mill. On Feb. 15, 1827, he married Caroline, daughter of Cornelius and Annas Board, of Chester, a school-mate and early friend. Of this union were born Susan, died young; Phebe Ann, married Isaac V. Wheeler, of Warwick; John J., died young; Hannah, born Aug. 1, 1832, died May 4, 1851; Mary Elizabeth, born July 18, 1834, died Nov. 26, 1849; Susan Caroline, who lives on the homestead in Blooming-Grove;

Charles Richard, married Harriet N., daughter of Jesse and Caroline Roe, of Chester, and resides on the homestead, an active and successful man; and Emma Lena, married Nathaniel B. Zabriskie, of Hackensack, N. J.

The year of his marriage Mr. Bull purchased 92 acres of land of Thaddeus Seeley in Blooming-Grove, upon which he settled. He afterwards bought 118 acres of land adjoining his original purchase, and in 1836 he purchased 198 acres in Blooming-Grove. On his original purchase was an iron ore mine which, in 1864, he sold to Peter P. Parrot, of Greenwood, N. Y. Mr. Bull followed agricultural pursuits during his life, and was a successful farmer, and an officer of the Orange County Agricultural Society. He was one of the original incorporators and stockholders of the Chester Bank, acted as its president for a short time, and was a director in its board from its founding until his death. He was a man of good judgment, and his financial abilities were acknowledged by business men. Mr. Bull was interested in all that pertained to the welfare of his town, county, and State, and was looked upon as a leading citizen. He became a member of the Presbyterian Church of Chester in 1837, and his wife is one of the oldest living members of that body. For forty-two years he was a manager of the Orange County Bible Society for the town of Blooming-Grove. In politics he was a Republican, and was a delegate to the State conventions of his party at different times. He was for many years a justice of the peace, and was also commissioner of deeds of his town. At the time of his death the Goshen Democrat said, "He was a good citizen and a leading man, was highly respected, and would be greatly missed by the community in which he lived." On Feb. 15, 1877, Mr. Bull and his wife celebrated their golden wedding, about 200 guests being present. He died Jan. 5, 1878.

HAMPTONBURGH.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

HAMPTONBURGH is one of the interior towns of the county, lying somewhat northeast of the centre. Its outline is that of an irregular pentagon, rendering it difficult to state its boundaries by the four cardinal points of the compass. It is approximately accurate to give them as follows: North by Montgomery, east by New Windsor and Blooming-Grove, south by Blooming-Grove and Goshen, west by Goshen and Wallkill. The area of Hamptonburgh may be approximately stated at 16,621 acres, as determined by the last supervisors' report. The assessed valuation of the town was $1,010,850, and the total tax paid upon that basis was $9792.53. The title to the soil of Hamptonburgh must be traced back to the several patents mentioned elsewhere. The town is made up of territory taken from earlier towns and from both sides of the "old county line."

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

This small territory is abundantly watered. The Wallkill River separates it from the town of Wallkill on the northwest; the Otterkill describes in its course an irregular curve of more than half a circle, flowing out of the town of Goshen, sweeping northward beyond Campbell Hall, eastward to Burnside, and southward to the line of Blooming-Grove; the Beaver Dam flowing south from the town of Montgomery unites with the Otterkill a short distance northeast of Campbell Hall; and several small rivulets complete the drainage of the town. Lying mostly in the valleys of these streams, its surface is rolling or moderately hilly.

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

It is the uniform testimony of previous writers that the first settlement on the territory now embraced by Hamptonburgh was made by Christopher Denne.

The date of the Wawayanda Patent was April 29, 1703. It was necessary that a beginning should be made somewhere in order to open up the lands, get them into the market, and secure purchasers. After several efforts to induce settlers to enter upon the patent had failed, the patentees seem to have determined to make the settlement themselves. Among the patentees was Christopher Denne.

Denne was a resident of New York in 1701, and one of the signers of the Protestant petition to William III. in that year. In 1702 his name appears appended to the congratulatory address to Lord Cornbury as one "of the chiefest inhabitants of the city and county of New York," and in 1705 he was one of the signers to a petition by the merchants of that city. He was still a resident of New York in 1708 and 1714, and died there in 1722-23. His wife, Elizabeth, died there, and by her will, dated Dec. 29, 1730, gave her property to Sarah Jones, spinster, and Vincent Matthews, of Matthewsfield. Sarah Jones afterwards married Thomas Brown. It is questionable whether Denne ever resided on the Wawayanda Patent for anything more than a temporary period.

Mr. Eager, in his history of the county, modernized the statement of the boundaries of the tract taken up by Denne so as to be understood at the time he wrote, 1846. They are probably yet sufficiently clear for popular reading, as follows:

"Beginning at a stake and stones about east of and ten chains from the dwelling-house of Gen. Abraham Vail in East Division; thence northwesterly along the northeasterly bounds of the Goshen town lots, and until it meets with a line supposed to divide the old counties of Ulster and Orange; thence east along the same to a stake and stones known to be standing near the top of the highland or mountain above Charles Heard's, in Hamptonburgh; thence on a course south about thirty-six degrees west to the place of beginning."

Upon this lot on the west bank of the Otterkill, and from six to eight chains westerly from Tusten's bridge, Christopher Denne in 1714 located a residence for himself and family. It is understood that Denne made quite an extensive visit through the territory and explored it before undertaking the enterprise; that he made the acquaintance of the Indians in this locality and secured their good will. He is also reported to have had the aid of three of the natives to assist him in his removal, and that for this purpose they accompanied him to New York. There was in the family of Mr. Denne an orphan girl brought up by them, they having no children of their own. Mr. Denne, so runs the tradition, induced this young woman, then sixteen years of age, to accompany a party sent out by him to begin this settlement. Her name was Sarah Wells, and as Mr. Eager's account of her was derived from her immediate descendants, and as he himself had seen her in her old age while he was a boy, we can do no better than quote his description:

"In person Sarah Wells was smaller than the majority of her sex; yet though light and fragile she was active, and capable of remarkable exercise and endurance. This, in part, may have resulted from the fact that while young she had been in the habit of crossing the ferry in an open boat from Staten Island to New York, attending to the market business of her patrons. This exposure while it imparted health by the exercise, not only hardened and compacted a constitution otherwise delicate, but deepened the sanguine color of her complexion. Her eyes were neither large nor prominent, but dark, playful, and sparkling. Though not a flippant talker, she was free and conversed with fluency, and when excited to reply to some rude remarks or impertinent inquiry her eyes would flash like fire, and the presumptuous intruder was sure to be wounded in the conflict and carry the scar home with him for reflection."

The full story of this expedition of Sarah Wells from the New York home to the depths of this interior wilderness reads like a romance, and may well for a thousandth time prove that "truth is stranger than fiction." The party consisted of the three young Indians, several carpenters sent forward by Mr. Denne, "and Sarah Wells." On board the sloop by which they came up the Hudson were the few necessary utensils to commence house-keeping with, the tools of the carpenters, and other luggage. The evening of the second day saw them at New Windsor. They spent the night on board the boat, and the next morning, with goods loaded upon the animals and a general order of procession fully observed, they took up their line of travel for the banks of the Otterkill. The pen of the American novelist should revel in this forest march. The cows, the dogs, the horses, the Indians, the white men, and Sarah Wells together made up as unique a procession as ever set forward to settle a province or found a state. Whatever thoughts occupied the mind of Sarah Wells we cannot say. Tradition tells us that the Indians were kind and full of gentle ways towards this unprotected girl. And here we desire to add that no instance is recorded of violence by the Indians of the Wawayanda Patent towards the white men after the Esopus peace of 1663. The Indians who remained on the patent obeyed the provisions of that treaty, and respected scrupulously the rights conveyed to their successors. Thus the day's march was successfully made, and a wigwam, hastily constructed, that evening received the weary party on the east bank of the Otterkill. It was in the month of May when this entry upon the patent was made. The stream was swollen, and rafts were built by which the crossing was effected the next day. A log house was hastily erected by the white men with the aid of the Indians, and thus the settlement began.

It appears, however, that Sarah Wells was left as the solitary white woman of the party, but Mr. Eager's account states that Christopher Denne and wife came to this new home on the evening of the first day after the arrival of the advance party, so that the young girl had passed but three nights away from their care,—one on the Hudson River coming up, one at New Windsor landing, and one in the wigwam on the east bank of the Otterkill. In the midst of the unpacking of the "coffee, sugar, sacks of flour, and hams," the driving up and milking of the cows, and the getting ready for the first night's rest in the new log cabin, the "old folks" suddenly appeared on the scene. The strain of danger on the part of Sarah Wells was over with. She fainted, as a first-class heroine ought to, at the very feet of her foster-mother. She "came to" without help. All hands had a right royal supper, and no doubt slept well in their new home. It hardly seems necessary to enter upon a labored defense of Christopher Denne, as a previous writer has done, for his apparent inhumanity in sending Sarah Wells forward with the advance expedition. On the whole, it seems to have been judiciously planned and successfully executed. His forethought had provided for every question, arranged for every emergency, and himself and wife followed immediately. They came overland from what is now Jersey City, stopping one night at the falls of the Ramapo, and reaching the Otterkill thirty-six hours later than Sarah Wells and party. The tradition is usually summed up as follows: "Sarah Wells was the first civilized white woman, and Madam Denne the second, who placed a foot upon that part of the patent of Wawayanda which laid in the town of Goshen."

The second settler of whom special mention should be made is William Bull. He was born at Wolverhampton, England, February, 1689. In an account of this early settler we rely upon tradition and the statements of Sarah Wells, his wife, which were generally known among his immediate descendants. When he was young, his father left England and located at Dublin, Ireland, where he was apprenticed to learn the trade of a mason and stone-cutter. When his apprenticeship ended, he, with a young friend and fellow-mason, contracted to build the arch of a large bridge, which was then in progress of erection in the vicinity of the city, and had they succeeded, it might have established their credit as good workmen and talented young men; but just as they were closing the arch and finishing the job, down it tumbled, and with it the young and bright prospects of the venturesome builders. Bull was overwhelmed by the unexpected calamity, and feeling that future success there was hopeless, he at once determined to emigrate and build his fortune in America. His money amounted to five guineas, and he went down to the dock and inquired of the officer on board if five guineas was sufficient to pay his passage. The reply was in the affirmative, and he forthwith completed his arrangements to leave. When the time came, he embarked, having nothing to encumber him but his clothes, five guineas, and a few books. When the ship arrived in port, Bull presented himself to the captain to pay his five guineas and go ashore; but was told that it was not enough, and being informed it was all he had, replied that he must then be sold for the balance. Bull was very much incensed at the trick put on him by false information in Ireland, and at the indignity so coolly about to be inflicted upon him, promptly told the officer that "he would not be sold, that he would abide by the ship and return to Ireland, and that if he had to be a servant it should be there and not in a strange land."

Misfortune had compelled him to leave his country, and now when about to realize his cherished hopes and anxious expectations, it was threatening to drive him back again, and he was in great doubt what course to adopt. But in this case "his necessity was God's opportunity." Just at this time Daniel Cromeline, who had an interest in the Wawayanda Patent, and was about to make a settlement thereon, finding an Irish passenger ship in port and thinking that he might procure some laborers and artisans there, went on board and made his wants known to the captain. Proclamation was made throughout the ship that there was a gentleman on board who wanted to employ some workmen and mechanics to settle a new country, and if there were any on board who were willing to engage, to come forward. William Bull spoke and said that he was an artisan and laborer, and had left Ireland for America thinking he had money to pay his passage; but that falling short and for the deficiency was about to be sold, which he had refused to be, he thought of returning, but if any gentleman would advance the money, he would undertake, should his health and life be spared, he should have no cause to regret the kindness. Cromeline, pleased with his appearance, prompt and manly bearing, advanced the money and they left the ship together.

Bull, in company with other workmen, soon went with Cromeline upon the patent, to prepare to erect a dwelling and make a settlement. Bull executed the mason and others the carpenter work, and he cut the year of erection, 1716, in the stones of the chimney. The boards of the house were sawed by a whip in a sawpit, and the whole wood-work fastened by wood pins in place of nails. This at the time, and for years afterwards, was the largest and best house from New Windsor to New Jersey. As it was on the traveled route leading into New Jersey it soon became of great notoriety, and being a public inn was a place of resort for the country round. This house was known as the "Old Gray Court House," and was in the present town of Chester, about five miles southeast from the mansion of Christopher Denne, in Hamptonburgh. The structure was honestly built, having stood as a tenement till 1832, about one hundred and sixteen years, which cannot be affirmed of any other in the county, except the Bull stone house at Hamptonburgh.* At that early day, and for years afterwards, the population was very sparse in that part of the county, and all living within a dozen miles of each other were near neighbors, and kept up an intimate and friendly intercourse. As Christopher Denne was a patentee and Daniel Cromeline interested in the patent, both having made settlements and living within six miles of each other, it was natural and expected that these families would often meet on the most friendly terms. Thus William Bull, who continued to live at the Cromeline house, became acquainted with Sarah Wells, which eventuated in matrimony in the year 1718. The young people of that day had a great deal of business to do, and their offers were sincerely and promptly made on the one side, and promptly and honestly accepted or rejected on the other. What they did was done quickly, as they had no time to spare, and consequently there were no courtships of seven years' standing. Inclination and the demands of a new country forbade all tampering and procrastination.

Previous to this time courts of justice had been established and a magistrate resided in the neighborhood, who was called upon to perform the marriage ceremony, there being no priest to do it. Bull was an Episcopalian, and wished to be married according to the forms of that church, but how were the bans to be published three times to make the contract valid? After long deliberation they concluded that circumstances altered cases, and that three proclamations made in one day were as effectual for all purposes as if they were made during three successive weeks. To test the principle and carry it out in practice, the guests being assembled and the bride and groom anxiously waiting to know how it was to be performed, the magistrate with a solemnity demanded by the occasion took up the book of common prayer and proceeded to the front door of the house, and there proclaimed the bans to the trees of the forest, then he walked through the hall to the back door and made a second proclamation to the cattle and outbuildings, and then again at the front door made a third to the wilderness at large, whereupon the marriage ceremony was immediately performed. Tradition affirms this to have been the first marriage within the limits of the old town of Goshen.

As Christopher Denne had promised Sarah Wells 100 acres of land, she, now being of age and married, requested a fulfillment of the promise. Without disclosing his object, Christopher Denne advised her "not to be in a hurry about it, that she had married a young Irishman who might play her some trick, and finally leave her, and the title might as well be left where it was for the present." She replied that "Bull was born in England, and though brought up in Ireland, she did not know that that made him an Irishman; and that he was as good an Englishman as himself." Denne manifested no resentment at what she said, and smiling pleasantly put her off. He told her, however, to go and select 100 acres of his unimproved land where she pleased, and locate it, and it should be secured to her. This was done and possession taken. But William Bull, however, desired to possess land that he could call his own, and in place of settling on the 100 acres, he located on the southeasterly side of Christopher Denne's lot, then considered wild and unappropriated, and since designated by the "old Bull stone house at Hamptonburgh." On this he erected his log cabin in 1719 or 1720. The location was a favorable one. The land was of a fine quality and well watered, and on settling he called the place "Hamptonburgh," in honor of Wolverhampton, the place of his birth. It is proper to say that the title to the 100 acres was made in fee-simple to John Bull, the eldest son, which was a compliment too frequently paid by the partiality of the English law.

When Denne settled, he supposed he had located on the patent of Wawayanda, but as that patent was bounded there, by the northwest line, when the new northwest line came to be run it cut Denne's settlement off of the patent. His improvement was secured in this way. By the English law, at this time, a bona fide settler was entitled to a patent of 600 acres, and this he determined to procure, but dying before he accomplished it, the patent was issued to his widow, Madam Denne.

Bull and Gerard, in 1723, procured a patent of 2600 acres just east of the 100 acres, and on this William Bull erected the stone house in 1727, which is still standing. This building is literally founded on a rock, and has a spring in the cellar. The house is two stories of eleven feet each, with a sharp roof, and for a dwelling of that number of stories is the highest in the county, measuring from the first floor to the peak. It is wonderful that the building is in so good preservation, for it has once been riven by a thunder-bolt, and while building was rocked by the vibrations of an earthquake.

The family tradition is, that before the stone house was erected Bull lived in a log hut in the vicinity, and that while the stone house was building and nearly completed, about twelve o'clock at night he and Mrs. Bull were waked up by a rumbling noise and a shaking of the bed and house, which they thought an earthquake, and Mrs. Bull remarked to him, "William, we have lost our new house." On inspecting the building in the morning they found a crack, beginning in the lower part of the first story, at the east end, which extended up through the second story. This was plastered up and the house

* There is no doubt that the Cromeline house was the first that was erected on the Wawayanda Patent. Its date "1716," indicates the time of its completion, rather than that of its commencement. The employes of Cromeline, Denne and Aske, came at about the same time. (See General History, p. 17.)

Chas M Thompson

His paternal grandfather was Jonathan, who settled in Orange County at an early day, and married Hannah Brooks. Their children were John L., Lewis, Oliver, Jane (married Charles Monell, of Goshen, N. Y.), and Benjamin F.

Oliver was the father of our subject, and was born in October, 1787. He married Sarah Mathers, daughter of one of the early Revolutionary families of Orange County, and their issue were Alfred, deceased; Charles M.; Cornelia A., deceased, who became the wife of George W. Stevens, of Susquehanna County, Pa.; Mary E., wife of George Pierson, of Hamptonburgh; John L., deceased; Oliver B.; Catharine A., widow of Charles W. Post, of Hamptonburgh; Sarah, deceased, became the wife of George W. Beardsley, of Brooklyn, L. I.; David H., a farmer of Hamptonburgh; Emily F., married Wm. Brett, a shipping merchant of New York; Hannah, married A. Ferd. Cross, of New York; and Carrie, married Augustus Brett, a shipping merchant of New York.

Oliver Thompson was a large and successful farmer of Hamptonburgh for many years, and owned several hundred acres of land. He was energetic in his business affairs, and was a man of temperate habits, giving his time almost wholly to his agricultural pursuits and having no desire for official position, though he always performed the full duties of the citizen in town and county matters. He died March 12, 1863. His wife died May 6, 1861, at the age of sixty-five years.

Charles M. Thompson was born in Wallkill (now Hamptonburgh), Dec. 17, 1816. His early life was one of labor upon his father's farm, and his education was confined to the common schools. For four years, from 1840, he was connected with the flouring-mill, plastering-mill, and saw-mill at Brooks' Mills, Hamptonburgh. In 1844 he became a partner with Jennings & Thompson, of Goshen, in a general mercantile and freighting business, which continued until 1846 when he withdrew from the firm, and in 1848 bought the James Strong farm of one hundred and seventy-three acres in Hamptonburgh. The following year he moved upon this, where he has since resided. Mr. Thompson has been a farmer by occupation, and is a fitting representative of the agricultural interests of Orange County.

In 1854 he represented the Second District of Orange County in the New York State Legislature; and in 1855 and 1856, and for fourteen consecutive years, from 1860, represented the town of Hamptonburgh in the board of supervisors, and was chairman of that body in 1865, 1869, and 1873. He is one of the trustees of the Goshen Savings-Bank, and has been a member and one of the trustees of the First Presbyterian Church of Hamptonburgh for many years.

Mr. Thompson is a man of active mind, and still retains an interest in the matters of the town and county of which he has formed a part. He married Lorinda, daughter of Robert D. Hunter, of Crawford, May 14, 1851, and of this union was born Robert O. Thompson. She died June 5, 1853. On Feb. 20, 1861, he married Mary A., daughter of John A. Wilbur, of Wallkill, and their children are Charles M., William M., and Mary Jennie.

finished, and the seam is very observable at this time. Indeed, there has been no time since built when it was not there. This is corroborated by reference to an old work entitled "The Life and Travels of Samuel Bownes, in 1726 and '27." Bownes was an English Quaker and came out to travel and visit his friends in the colonies, and while here attended the yearly meetings through New England. In September, 1727, he was attending the yearly meeting in Rhode Island. Speaking of the conclusion of the meeting he says, "This evening as I was going to bed, about ten o'clock at night, there was an exceeding great earthquake, that made a noise like driving carts or wagons on an uneven causeway; it continued about two minutes, to the great surprise of the people. It was felt about fifteen hundred miles as was afterwards computed, and as was thought, by calculation, was not quite three hours going that space."

William Bull died February, 1755, aged sixty-six. Sarah Wells, his wife, was born April 6, 1694, and died April 21, 1796, aged one hundred and two years and fifteen days. They were buried in the family yard at Hamptonburgh, in the grounds he gave for the purpose, and known as "Burying Hill." Her children by William Bull were John, born May 3, 1721, married Miss Holly, of Goshen; William, born March 13, 1723, married Miss Booth, of Hamptonburgh; Sarah, born Sept. 1, 1725, married Charles Booth, of Hamptonburgh; Thomas, born Dec. 27, 1727, married Miss Kerr, of Florida; Isaac, born Nov. 17, 1729, married Miss Mulliner, of Little Britain; Esther, born May 29, 1731, married John Miller, of Montgomery; Mary, born Feb. 3, 1733, married Benjamin Booth, of Hamptonburgh; Margaret, born May 1, 1736, married — Horton, of Goshen; Catharine, born May 24, 1738, married James Faulkner, of Walkkill; Ann, born Nov. 4, 1740, married Wm. Eager, of Neelytown; Richard, born May 29, 1743, married Miss Budd, of Goshen; Elinor, born March 4, 1745, married Henry Weller, of Montgomery.

The remarkable longevity of Mrs. Bull served to bring the events of the early settlements clearly to the knowledge of a comparatively late generation. She married, after the death of Wm. Bull, Johannes Miller, one of the earliest settlers of Montgomery. He died in 1782, and she survived him fourteen years. Truly a venerable relic of a former age, surviving in the midst of a wide circle of descendants and marriage connections. An orphan girl,—a foster-child,—in her history is exemplified the language of the Bible, "Thou settest the solitary in families."

The early settlement of this town is further shown in the full and valuable records given in the chapters upon those towns from which it was formed. To these reference must be made for additional names. The early papers in the General History and in the town chapters of Montgomery, Walkkill, Cornwall, Blooming-Grove, New Windsor, and Goshen, all throw more or less light upon the settlement of this territory.

The Christopher Denne place (identical with the Tusten place) is frequently alluded to in these pages. It is occupied by Mrs. G. W. Price. Mrs. Price is a daughter of Ezra Sanford, now living at the age of eighty-seven in Warwick. Her husband (now deceased) was from Warwick also, and they settled here on the Tusten farm about 1838. Through her grandparents, one or both from this neighborhood, she is well informed on the early traditions, and can relate many interesting incidents of those times.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

This town was formed from Goshen, Blooming-Grove, Montgomery, New Windsor, and Walkkill in 1830. The following proceedings took place at the first town-meeting, held April 5, 1831:

"At the annual town-meeting for the town of Hamptonburgh, held at Charles Heads', pursuant to the act erecting said town, April 5, 1831, James D. Bull was appointed clerk of said meeting, pro tem. Hezekiah Watkins and Benjamin Brown were appointed to associate with Morrison Taylor, Esq., inspectors of said town-meeting, and to conduct the business. The following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved, That the next annual town-meeting be held on the first Tuesday of April next, and that said town-meeting be held at the house of James Mapes.

"Resolved, That there be three assessors for the ensuing year.

"Resolved, That there be three constables for the ensuing year.

"Resolved, That fence-viewers have one dollar per day.

"Resolved, That commissioners and inspectors of common schools have one dollar per day for their services.

"Resolved, That the collector have three per cent. for collecting the taxes.

"Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to draft by-laws, and that Stephen Ingersoll, Hezekiah Watkins, Jr., John McBride, Henry P. Hopkins be said committee.

"Resolved, That the sum of $250 be raised for the support of bridges.

"Resolved, That every man's yard shall be his pound.

"The following persons were elected town officers:

"Supervisor, Stephen Ingersoll; Town Clerk, Ebenezer Bull; Assessors, Capt. William Jackson, John McBride, John Barker; Commissioners of Highways, Stephen Ingersoll, Hezekiah Watkins, William Jackson; Commissioners of Common Schools, Ebenezer Bull, Robert C. Hunter, Vincent Booth; Inspectors of Common Schools, James D. Bull, Barto Wright, John McCord; Overseers of the Poor, William Conning, John B. Horton; Collector, Andrew L. McCord; Justices of the Peace, Henry Pierson, Morrison Taylor, Stephen Ingersoll, Benjamin Brown Constables, Samuel R. Laroe, Edward Drake, Milton Robertson."

The road districts were thirty-one in number, and the following overseers were appointed; and the days' work assessed upon each district are shown by the numbers attached to the names:

V.—VILLAGES.

CAMPBELL HALL

is situated very nearly in the centre of the town, and is a station on the Wallkill Valley Railroad. Mr. Eager says of this place,—

"It was formerly the residence of Col. Campbell, and received its name in true English style. Col. Campbell was a Scotchman. His daughter, Mrs. Margaret Eustace, wife of Dr. Eustace, is mentioned by Mr. Eager as the lady who had few equals in dignity of manner, good sense, and lady-like deportment. Gen. Eustace, of the Revolutionary army of France, was a son of Dr. Eustace. Both he and his mother are said to have died in the vicinity of Newburgh sixty to seventy years ago."

In this connection we give the following paper:

The story of Campbell Hall is well worthy of preservation. "Capt. Lachlin Campbell, of the isle of Islay, in North Britain," says Judge Jones, in his recently published "History of New York during the Revolutionary War," "encouraged by a proclamation issued by George Clark, Esq., then (1737) Lieutenant-Governor of New York, with the advice of His Majesty's Council promising 30,000 acres of land adjoining Lake George to any person who would undertake the immediate settlement of it, came to New York, viewed the land, and liked it much. He was begged by the Indians to settle there; they were struck and delighted with his Highland dress. The grant was promised in a public advertisement signed by the Lieutenant-Governor himself. It was to be free of all charges, the king's quit-rents and the fees of surveying excepted. The faith of the government thus pledged, Campbell thought himself safe, returned to Scotland, sold his estate there, and at his own expense transported to New York 83 Protestant families, consisting of 483 men, besides women and children.* Private faith and public honor demanded the performance of a promise so solemnly made, to an undertaking so expensive to himself and so beneficial to the colony. It, however, failed."

The Lieutenant-Governor, notwithstanding his promise, together with Cadwallader Colden, James Alexander, and Philip Livingston, Esq., three of the Council, insisted each upon a share in the grant. Campbell, who was a man of spirit, would by no means consent. The letters patent were refused. Campbell applied to the General Assembly. They had no jurisdiction or power in matters of this kind. He then applied to the Board of Trade. This he found too expensive. He therefore left his immigrants to themselves† (one of whom, John McDougal, was the father of Gen. Alexander McDougal of the American Revolution), and with the small remains of his fortune purchased a farm in Ulster (now Orange) County, built a house, and gave it the name of Campbell Hall.

He was active, loyal, and spirited. When he heard of the rebellion in 1745 he took up his broadsword, went to New York, embarked for England, went to Scotland, served as a volunteer under the Duke of Cumberland, signalized himself in the battle of Culloden, saw the rebellion at an end and his native country at peace. He then returned to New York, went to Campbell Hall, and shortly after died. In regard to the descendants of Capt. Campbell very little is known to the writer of this article. He appears to have had sons Donald, George, James, and daughters Rose, Lily, and Margaret (Mrs. Eustace). The latter had one son, Gen. J. J. Eustace, referred to by Mr. Eager.

Of the oldest, Donald, Judge Jones writes: "Donald was born at the Hall. He was a youth when his father died. There were several children, the estate not large. Donald was therefore apprenticed to a merchant in New York. When his time was out he went several voyages as a supercargo to the West Indies. By this means he made some money. When the war of 1755 broke out he was living in New York, and doing some little business in a mercantile way. In 1756, Lord John Murray's Highland Regiment arrived. Among the officers Donald found several relations. He was young, active, and sprightly. He

* By a petition on file at Albany, it appears the immigrants came in three ships in 1738-40.—Land Papers, xvi., page 142.

† So far as this relates to Capt. Campbell it is correct. After his death, however, a grant of 47,450 acres was made to eighty-three of the families who accompanied him. This grant was made May 21, 1764, and constituted the town of Argyle, Washington Co.

Daniel H. Bull

DANIEL H. BULL is a lineal descendant of William Bull, who was born in England in 1689, and came to this country when a young man. By trade he was a mason, and built the old stone house in Hamptonburgh known as the "Bull Homestead" about 1720. Sarah Wells, the first white woman who came to Goshen township, was his wife, and it is from this ancestry that most of the people in the United States who bear the name of Bull are descended.

Their descendants in the first generation were John, William, Sarah, Thomas, Isaac, Esther, Mary, Margaret, Catherine, Ann, Richard, and Eleanor. These children married and reared large families, and John, who was born in 1721 on the homestead, was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch.

His wife was Hannah Holly, of Goshen, and they had children,—Ebenezer, Sarah, Elizabeth, Mary, William, Samuel, John, Richard, Daniel, Esther, and Crisse.

Richard, who was born in 1762, was the father of Daniel H. Bull. On April 12, 1800, he married Lena Harlow, and settled in Chester, at the Sugar Loaf Valley. He lived there as a farmer and miller until his death, on Jan. 5, 1846. Here also his children were born,—Hannah (deceased), Jesse (whose biographical sketch appears under the history of the town of Blooming-Grove), James, Harvey, Daniel H., Ira, and Charles W. (deceased).

Daniel H. Bull was born at the homestead, Dec. 11, 1806. He was early taught by his father habits of industry on the farm and in the mill, and his educational advantages were confined to the schools of his native town.

On Jan. 8, 1840, he married Mary Ann, daughter of Nathaniel and Mary (Kingsland) Board, of New Jersey, and of this union were born Harriet, who died Aug. 27, 1865, at the age of twenty-four years; Mary B., married John W. Harlow, a farmer of Wallkill; Sarah, died Aug. 6, 1865, at the age of twenty-one years; Anna L., who lives at home; Charles W., who died Aug. 23, 1865, in the nineteenth year of his age; and Richard, who lives at home.

The year after his marriage Mr. Bull left the homestead, and purchasing two hundred acres of land of James D. Bull, in the township of Hamptonburgh, moved upon it. There he has since resided, giving his attention and energies to his farm and fireside. He can see the result of his industry; and his life, though unassuming, has been active and honest. Mr. Bull is a member of the Orange County Agricultural Society, and pays some attention to stock-raising.

He and his wife are members of the Hamptonburgh Presbyterian Church, and there the family attend. He is a fitting representative of a successful agriculturist in the fourth generation of his paternal ancestor, William Bull.

quitted the business of a merchant, entered as a volunteer in this regiment, and served in a campaign or two. Whether he was ever promoted in this regiment I know not, but we find him a lieutenant in the Royal Americans at Quebec after its reduction in 1759. Upon the conclusion of the peace of 1763 Donald was reduced to half-pay, went to England, and presented a memorial to the crown, setting forth his father's sufferings, loyalty, and ill-usage, and praying a compensation for himself and family. The memorial was referred and recommended to the Governor of New York. Gen. Monkton, then Governor, laid it before his Council, who advised a grant of land. Letters patent were therefore issued, granting to Donald, as the eldest son, 20,000 acres of land, and to his mother, sisters, and brothers 20,000 acres more.* His business completed he returned to England, and, pretending a relationship to the Duke of Argyle, Lord Loudon, and other heads of the Campbell family, he lived high, kept good company, and frequented all places of diversion. The result was that he was obliged to return to New York, where he mortgaged his estates to pay his debts.

"He was in New York when the rebellion (1775) broke out, and having little or nothing to lose, and much perhaps to gain, he entered heartily into the American cause. He was appointed deputy quartermaster in the American army, went with Montgomery into Canada, was at the siege of St. John's, at Montreal when it surrendered, and at Quebec. It is not known that he was otherwise actively engaged in the war. His half-pay from Great Britain was of course taken from him. He retired into the country, where he lived until his death. George, his brother, was a lieutenant in an old English regiment in America during the war of 1755. He afterwards went to India in a military station. When the rebellion broke out he returned to New York and became a lieutenant-colonel in Fanning's corps. Upon the reduction of Georgia by the British he went there, raised a regiment of horse, served during the war, and retired from the English army on half-pay of a lieutenant-colonel."

From this statement it will be seen that Campbell Hall is directly connected with some of the most important periods in European and American history. It was a fighting family literally, and for three generations at least maintained its reputation.

* Judge Jones says that at the time of the granting of this land Donald Campbell had a brother, George, two sisters, and a mother living. The petition on file at Albany (Jan. 5, 1763) contains the names of Donald, George, and James, while the grant recites the names of Donald Campbell, George Campbell, James Campbell, Rose Graham, Margaret Eustace, Lily Murray, and Allen Campbell, Jr., who together received 10,000 acres of Saratoga lands. An order of the king in council, May 13, 1764, gave Donald Campbell 30,000 acres additional, and Oct. 18, 1765, he received 2000 acres for his services as lieutenant in the Seventy-seventh Regiment. The grant of 1763 was extended (1772) to Donald Campbell, George Campbell, James Campbell, Rose Graham, Margaret Eustace, and Lily Murray, for 30,000 acres. In 1790, Donald, with the rank of colonel, claimed bounty-lands from New York for his services in the Revolution, and received 15,000 acres, now part of Peru, Clinton Co.

A post-office was established at Campbell Hall Jan. 30, 1869, and B. F. Decker was appointed postmaster. He has been the only incumbent of the office. Other business at this point may be mentioned, as the store of B. F. Decker; tin-shop of F. D. Case; blacksmith- and wagon-shop of F. Case; the creamery now being erected by the Farmers' Association; the railroad business, E. Helms, station agent. It is understood that the extension of the New York, Ontario and Western Railroad from Cornwall to Middletown is to pass near Campbell Hall, thus securing increased railroad facilities for this town.

is directly south of Campbell's Hall, and is the site of the settlement made by William Bull, as already stated. It is only four miles from Goshen, leaving but little trade or business to develop a village at that point. The one church of the town is located here, and with its parsonage constitutes the most important feature. There is a hotel by A. E. Hulse; a blacksmith-shop by the Rose Brothers, and a creamery owned by D. H. Thompson. There was formerly a store here, but there is none at the present time.

The old stone house where William Bull lived is a short distance from the village, and also the beautiful rounded hill where is located the early graveyard. A fine farming country lies round about this point.

is the old and well-known neighborhood on both sides of the town line,—Montgomery and Hamptonburgh.

BURNSIDE

is a hamlet on the Otterkill, in the east part of the town, near the line of New Windsor. The place has been known as Otterville, but the name of Burnside being given to the post-office will gradually supersede the older name. There is at this place the grist-mill of Charles Rose, also a saw-mill owned by him, and a distillery by O. P. Hinckley. Charles Rose also has a store.

KIPP'S

is on the line of Goshen, and is a milk station upon the railroad. It also affords an opportunity for passengers to leave or take the cars in that neighborhood.

PURGATORY

is about one mile east of the Heard farm. In early times there was a dismal swamp of considerable extent, through which ran a small sluggish stream. Over this there was a log bridge with a causeway on each side. The name is said to have been bestowed by Peter Bull as a proper descriptive term of this dubious locality. Older residents who remember what a difficult road this was to travel, how easy it was to get into this place but how difficult to emerge in safety, appreciated the force of the name better than the present generation can.

was the sunny slope where Peter Bull above mentioned lived. In his mind it was so pleasant a home, and the seat of so much enjoyment, that he denominated it Paradise, as in the strongest possible contrast with the dismal region beyond.

is the pleasant name bestowed upon the place which formerly bore the unpoetical designation of Goose-town. This old name originated in the fact that a large number of geese were raised in that neighborhood, and it clung to the place long after the geese had mostly disappeared. It was only removed by holding a formal town-meeting and deliberately selecting the new name in honor of General Lafayette. This did the work effectually, and the older name now lives only in the chronicles of the past, or on the irreverent lips of some scoffer. There is a hotel at the present time, J. P. Monell, proprietor.

The greatest celebrity of Lagrange results from the location there of the stock farm of Charles Backman. Here are kept some of the best horses in Orange County, or in the United States. The number of horses at this splendid establishment often rises to three hundred. The place is much visited by lovers of the turf. Not far away, near the banks of the Wallkill, is a race-course.

DECKER'S

is a small settlement in a beautiful part of the country on the road from Washingtonville to Goshen. Here the Messrs. Decker erected their manufactory, and from them the name is given to the locality. Settlement began in this vicinity as early perhaps as 1730, for soon after this, in 1744, it was a missionary station under the care of the London Missionary Society, with New Windsor and St. Andrew's. At that time it was called St. David's Corners, that being the name of the church located there. The building was put up after 1770, but never finished, and during the Revolutionary war was used as a hospital by the American forces. Shortly after that it was partly blown over, never rebuilt, and allowed to go to decay. Vincent Matthews was an early patron of this church, and after him Jonathan Brooks greatly aided it. John I. Brooks, of Blooming-Grove, in later years, and Fletcher M. Brooks, of Hamptonburgh, were descendants of the last-named gentleman. This place is now acquiring the name of Lincolndale. There is not, however, much to constitute a village.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

The following persons served as school commissioners one or more years each during the period from the organization of the town to 1844: Ebenezer Bull, Robert C. Hunter, Vincent Booth, Capt. William Jackson, Hudson Webb, Bartow Wright, Elijah C. Watson, David W. Corwin, William L. Webb. During the same period the following persons served as inspectors of schools one or more years each: James D. Bull, Bartow Wright, John McCord, Hezekiah Watkins, John Payne, Hudson Webb, Benjamin Brown, Elijah C. Watson, Oliver B. Tuthill, William L. Webb, James S. Tuthill, Robert C. Hunter.

The system of supervision by town superintendents commenced in 1844, and continued until town supervision ceased and all official control of the schools passed to the district commissioners. The town superintendents of Hamptonburgh were as follows: 1844-46, Bartow Wright; 1847-50, A. B. Watkins, Jr.; 1851-55, Daniel T. Brown.

School districts in the town at the time of the organization: No. 1, Hamptonburgh; No. 2, Otterkill; No. 3, Bushkirks; No. 4, Bloomingdale; No. 5, Neelytown; No. 6, Lagrange.

Two or three years later: No. 1, Hamptonburgh; No. 2, Otterkill; No. 3, Little Britain; No. 4, Bloomingdale; No. 5, Neelytown; No. 6, Lagrange; No. 7, Poverty Hollow.

VII.—CHURCHES.

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF HAMPTONBURGH.*

The Presbyterian Church of Hamptonburgh is the legal successor of the late "Associate Reformed Church of Hamptonburgh," and through it of the old "Associate Church of Neelytown." It is impossible now to ascertain the exact date of the organization of the church of Neelytown. The nearest approach we can make to it is, that about the year 1765 or '67 a number of families left the Presbyterian Church of Goodwill and made application to the Associate Presbytery of Pennsylvania to be taken under its care and organized into a church.

The following names represent some of the earliest families connected with this church: William Eager, Thomas Beatty, James Wilkin, William Young, James McCobb, John Douglass, William Bull, James Bull, Samuel McCord, James Morrison, John M. Williams, David Miller, Andrew Wilson, John Hall, David Elliot, David Crawford, John Monell, Wm. Jackson, John McBride, Wm. Booth, Charles Booth, Wm. Conning, Samuel Wood.

April 15, 1767, a call was made out for the pastoral services of the Rev. Robert Annan, and on Oct. 2, 1772, he was installed pastor of the united congregation of Little Britain and Wallkill, or Neelytown. Mr. Annan continued to be the pastor of the Neelytown Church until 1783, when he removed to Boston.

In 1769 half an acre of ground was purchased of William Eager for "five pounds lawful currency of the Province of New York," and on it was erected the first house of worship occupied by the congregation. That building was described by one who often worshiped in it as "a wooden structure just in-

VINCENT BOOTH.

His great-grandfather, George Booth, came from Southold, L. I., and settled in Orange County in 1741. Benjamin Booth was the son of George, and he married Sarah Bull, daughter of William Bull and Sarah Wells, and was among the early tillers of the soil in the county. Thomas, who was a farmer by occupation, was one of their children. He married Jane Barker, of South Carolina, and their issue were Jesse, John (who was a prominent lawyer of Goshen, surrogate of Orange County, and died in Iowa), Vincent, Nancy (who married Washington Wood, of Newburgh), Amelia (who married Joseph Slaughter), and Louisa (deceased).

Thomas Booth died on the homestead, in Hamptonburgh, Oct. 3, 1824.

Vincent Booth, our subject, was born on the homestead in 1794; spent his early life at home, and attended the schools of his native place. Following the inclinations of his ancestors, he engaged in farming, and also managed a milling business. On Feb. 9, 1826, he married Mary A., daughter of William and Sarah (Booth) Conning, a descendant of one of the early families of the county, and spent his life on the homestead of one hundred and forty acres, located in Hamptonburgh (formerly a part of Goshen).

Mr. Booth took an active interest in the public matters of his town, represented it in the board of supervisors in 1852 and 1853, and was a justice of the peace of his township for two terms. Agricultural and stock matters always found in him a friend, and he was a stockholder of the Erie and of the Montgomery and Erie Railways.

He was a man of strong convictions and honesty of purpose. The Goshen Independent Republican, in its obituary notice of him, said: "That he was a man of sterling principles, strict integrity, and had left a name which calumny could neither dishonor or tarnish. Social and hospitable, his door was ever open to the calls of his friends and neighbors, and that few men in his community would be more missed from the walks of private life."

He died Nov. 1, 1871, his wife surviving him.

closed, or weather-boarded, the floors not plowed and grooved, and, in the course of years, much shrunken. The cold in winter was intolerable. Some of the females had foot-stoves; but there was no other artificial heat in the house." The house in which the first pastor lived was pleasantly situated on the banks of the Wallkill. It is still occupied and in a good state of preservation.

After Mr. Annan left, the church continued vacant for thirteen years, receiving occasional supplies from the Associate Reformed Presbytery of New York, with which it had become connected.

In December, 1796, the Rev. John McJimsey was installed pastor of the church. Mr. McJimsey was born in York Co., Pa., Aug. 18, 1772. He continued to be the pastor of the church until the year 1809, when he removed to Albany, having accepted a call from the Associate Reformed Church of that city.

Again, for a period of ten years, the church was vacant, during which time it received only occasional supplies of preaching from the New York Presbytery. At the close of that period, Dr. McJimsey, at the call of the church, resumed his pastoral labors among them, and continued until 1832, when he resigned his charge. In 1830 the congregation thought it expedient to change the site of their church building from Neelytown to Campbell Hall, about two miles to the southwest. A beautiful grove was selected crowning the top of a gentle hill on the banks of the Otterkill, and there a large and commodious house was erected, which, in February, 1832, was dedicated to the worship of God. At the same time the name of the church was changed from the "Associate Reformed Church of Neelytown" to the "Associate Reformed Church of Hamptonburgh."

The next pastor of the church was the Rev. Malcolm N. McLaren, who was installed at the church in Campbell Hall on Oct. 1, 1833. He resigned his office Aug. 15, 1843.

After the retirement of Mr. McLaren the church determined to change its ecclesiastical connection, and on application was received, at the close of the year 1843, under the care of the Presbytery of Hudson, in connection with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (Old School). The Rev. James R. Johnston, of the Presbytery of Hudson, was installed pastor of the church on Nov. 19, 1844. A minority of the church desiring to continue in connection with the Associate Reformed body, were left in possession of the church building at Campbell Hall, and of the parsonage, which had been erected a few years previous, at the rear of the church, on a plot of ground containing about two acres, the gift of Mr. Vincent Booth. Two pastors, the Rev. Mr. Kimball, and, after his retirement, the Rev. Mr. Gillespie, ministered to the few families who composed the church. But the numbers gradually diminished until, in the course of a few years, the church dissolved, and the building itself was removed. Its former site is now occupied by the district school-house. In the course of the summer of 1846 the majority of the congregation erected a new church and parsonage in Hamptonburgh, about a mile to the south of Campbell Hall. In this church the congregation still worships. Thus in the course of seventy-five years the congregation erected three houses of worship and two parsonages.

The Rev. Mr. Johnston resigned his pastoral office in the autumn of 1849. After a vacancy of a few months the church made out a call for the pastoral services of the Rev. S. C. Hepburn, of the Presbytery of Northumberland, Pa. He accepted the call, and was installed pastor July 2, 1850. This pastorate still continues.

It is impossible for us now to ascertain the names of the first elders of this church, as no records have come down to us of an earlier date than 1808. The following were ruling elders during the pastorate of Dr. McJimsey, viz.: James Morrison, William Bull, Andrew McCord, Samuel Wood, James Bull, Abraham Wilkin, William Bull, Jr., Capt. Andrew Wilson, James D. Bull, and Thomas D. Wilkin. Alexander Boyd, John B. Horton, John C. Wilber, and Spencer Horton were elected under the pastorate of Mr. McLaren, Mr. Charles Young under that of Mr. Johnston, and Ahiel Decker, William B. Vail, James Hawkins, and George W. Ackerly under that of Mr. Hepburn.

A Sabbath-school was established in connection with this church in the year 1828, and has continued until this day with unabated interest and efficiency. The various benevolent enterprises in which the Presbyterian Church is engaged have for many years past received the stated contributions of this church. A "Woman's Missionary Association" was organized in March, 1880, and the large attendance at its monthly meetings, and its liberal contributions to the cause of home and foreign missions, afford gratifying evidence of the interest felt in these great causes by the ladies of the church.

The present officers of the church are: Pastor, Rev. S. C. Hepburn; ruling elders, Charles Young, William B. Vail, James Hawkins, and George W. Ackerly; trustees, Charles M. Thompson, Joseph C. Eager, James Hawkins, Emmet Harlow, Micah Hawkins, George Pierson, Stephen I. Webb, Benj. F. Decker, and James Clark; number of church members, 135; Sunday-school scholars, 50; Sunday-school officers and teachers, 8.

ST. DAVID'S CHURCH OF HAMPTONBURGH (EPISCOPAL) executed a certificate of incorporation April, 1832. The meeting was held at the school-house near Decker's Corners; Rev. Nathan Kingsbury, rector of the church, presided, and the following officers were chosen: Peter W. Welling and Walter Halsey, wardens; Hezekiah Watkins, Abel B. Watkins, Henry Pierson, Jesse Hulse, John Decker, Samuel Brewster, Midas T. Hulse, Peter Welling, vestrymen. This was located at what is known as Lincolndale, and was an attempt to continue the organization of early times. The new movement was not a success.

Within the past few months (1880) services by an Episcopal clergyman have been held in the school-house, which occupies the site of old St. David's church, and those interested in Episcopal services hope to restore the worship of the earlier times on the same site or near there. For a full and valuable paper upon St. David's Church, see chapter upon the general religious history of the county.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF OTTERVILLE effected a legal organization Jan. 1, 1857. The proceedings were signed by Thomas Giles and James Laughlin. The trustees chosen were Thomas Giles, James Laughlin, and Stephen P. Flunkley. This relates to the work of the Methodist Church along the eastern border of Hamptonburgh, but was not continued so as to be the foundation of any church in this town.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

The principal cemetery is near the old family mansion of the pioneer William Bull. It contains the remains of the earliest pioneers in this vicinity. It has been kept in very good preservation and is still in use. In Neelytown, three miles north, is another old burial-place, and also one of later years. At Lincolndale (better known as Decker's Corners) is an old cemetery, dating back like the others to the early years of settlement, the remnants of old St. David's Cemetery. The Tuthill family lot was near the present residence of Horace Tuthill. Some of the remains have been removed, and a portion of the ground has been reduced to cultivation. A few graves, however, remain. The old stone for the pioneer Freegift Tuthill is still to be seen, bearing the initials F. T. and the date of death.

IX.—SOCIETIES.

At Campbell Hall there has been maintained for some years a grange of the order of Patrons of Husbandry. The new creamery now being built near Campbell Hall is owned by a "Farmers' Association." Other societies are the ordinary benevolent, social, and religious associations which usually exist in connection with church-work or for charitable objects. The town is in such close connection with Goshen that members of Masonic or other similar bodies doubtless belong to organizations in that place.

X. PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

These are fully brought out in the story of Christopher Denne's settlement and that of William Bull. To the numerous descendants of Sarah Wells, Hamptonburgh is a place of annual pilgrimage. There they celebrate in an appropriate manner the settlement of their ancestors and recount the romantic story of the wilderness,—the march, the settlement, the marriage.

THE BULL HOMESTEAD.

The Otterkill at "Tusten's Bridge" is the one spot around which clusters the romance of the early settlement by Christopher Denne. Standing upon this bridge one may let imagination wander back "at its own sweet will" to the pioneer settlers.

The Otterkill, now a comparatively small stream, was then of larger volume, like other streams before the primeval forest was cut away, and being swollen by a freshet was of considerable breadth. In the present young orchard on the Ryerson farm we must suppose the party to have halted for the night, and that there was the hastily built wigwam in which they slept.

Crossing the stream the next morning, a log house was partially constructed so as to be occupied that night. Tradition points to the spring, now covered with a small rough shed, and a heap of stones near, as the site of this first house. It is in the field opposite the present Price residence and near to the Otterkill. There is the place where the arrival of Christopher Denne and wife met with such a grand reception the same afternoon, where the supplies were unpacked and the country taken possession of in the name of the proprietors of the Wawayanda Patent.

Well may the bridge, marking all this scene so definitely, and bearing also the name of Denne's successors, the Tustens, father and son, be a historic landmark in Hamptonburgh. The subsequent more permanent residence was erected where Mrs. Price now resides, and that is the homestead where Dr. Tusten left his family to obey the call to arms, and to perish on the field of Minisink.

THE STONE HOUSE.

already described at Hamptonburgh, is the other prominent historic memorial of the early times. It is in good preservation. The solid walls, the new slate roof, the old strong doors, the general outline, all give it an interesting appearance.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

Agriculture is the chief business of the people of Hamptonburgh, and the town has a succession of fine farms, constituting a beautiful country, rich and productive. All the grains common to this section can be produced in abundance, yet the milk business takes precedence of all others. In the town there are four creameries, two, already mentioned in connection with the villages, by D. W. Thompson (Campbell Hall and Hamptonburgh); Harlow's, about two miles from Hamptonburgh; and one by A. Tower, a mile and a half east of Campbell Hall. The facilities for shipment are convenient, and this quiet rural town, through the complete railroad system of the

Solomon T. Smith

DERRICK SMITH, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, came from Glasgow, Scotland, and settled in Orange County about 1750. He here married Hannah Gale, and Daniel, who was born Nov. 1, 1763, was their son. He married Tabitha, daughter of Solomon and Tabitha (Watkins) Tuttle, and they had children,—Grant, Derrick, Harriet, Nathan, Martha, Hilia Ann, Alexander, Ichabod L., and Daniel, all of whom are dead except Martha, who lives in Western New York, and Alexander, who was born April 10, 1803, and lives in Hamptonburgh. Daniel Smith settled upon one hundred and seventy acres of land in what was then Wallkill (now Hamptonburgh) in 1805, and there spent the remainder of his life following agricultural pursuits. This property has since been the Smith homestead, passing from Daniel to Grant Smith, who was born Dec. 21, 1788. His wife was Miriam, daughter of Jesse Smith, whom he married Jan. 30, 1811. Jesse Smith was born Oct. 17, 1758, married Elizabeth Ansely, and reared a family of eleven children, of whom Miriam was the fourth. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and lived the life of a farmer in Orange County, where he died. Grant Smith, the father of Solomon T., lived on the homestead, served in the war of 1812, and was a leading business man and farmer in his town. Of this union were born Sarah Jane, married John M. Miller, of Wallkill, and resides in Indiana; Solomon T.; William A., a farmer of Wisconsin, who married Martha Watkins, of Orange County; Elizabeth, married Richard S. Denton, of Vernon, N. J.; and Harriet, who became the wife of Henry B. Smith, and, after his decease, of his brother, Nathaniel D. Grant Smith died Sept. 29, 1829. Miriam, his wife, was a woman of more than ordinary ability and energy. Left by the death of her husband with the sole care and control of five children, she retained possession of the homestead, and instilled into their minds when young the important lessons of industry and self-reliance which enabled them to become useful men and women. Until within a few years of her death, which occurred Nov. 17, 1878, at the age of eighty-eight years, she had been unusually active, and retained her mental faculties to a remarkable degree.

Solomon T. Smith was born on the homestead, Jan. 10, 1815. The common schools gave him his education, and to his mother he owes the early discipline of mind and muscle which developed into the useful citizen and the good farmer. By inheritance and purchase he obtained the homestead, and there his life was spent.

Mr. Smith was a man of good morals, temperate habits, and successful in his business affairs. Oftentimes his judgment was desired in the valuation of real estate, and his counsels were always judicious. He was indifferent to official position, and was more content with the duties of private life, always meeting his engagements with promptitude. For many years he was a member of the Goshen Presbyterian Church, and there his family attended.

His wife was Mary, daughter of Wickham and Catharine Tuttle, whom he married Nov. 20, 1850, and their children were Wickham T., who is the fourth generation on the homestead, and Martha, deceased. He died Nov. 27, 1876. His wife died April 7, 1870.

county, is in close connection with the New York markets.

XII.—MILITARY.

In its separate capacity the town has no military history prior to the war of the Rebellion. As a small town, and near to a recruiting-camp, many of the early enlistments from Hamptonburgh were probably entered under the name of Goshen in the printed muster-in rolls of the State. The credits by the Senatorial Committee of 1862 corrected this to some extent, but even where quotas were regularly assigned the credits do not in many cases correctly represent residence. As no record is found in the town clerk's office under the law of 1865, it is difficult to prepare any complete list for the town. The quotas of the town were:

July and August, 1862.....	40—credits, 40
Draft of Oct. 7, 1863—drawn.....	34
Call of Oct. 17, 1863.....	20

In its final settlement with the State, in 1865, the town received—

MINISINK.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

MINISINK is situated in the southwestern part of the county. It is bounded north and northeast by Wawayanda, southeast by Warwick, southwest by the State of New Jersey, west and northwest by Greenville. The area of Minisink, as determined by the last supervisors' report, is 13,877 acres. The assessed valuation was $69,375, and the tax collected upon that basis was $10,611.48. The title to the soil is derived partly from the Wawayanda Patent and partly from the Minisink, the boundary line between the patents passing through the town.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The surface is rolling and hilly. The slopes are mostly gradual, quite free from rocks, and hence are susceptible of cultivation to their very summits. The Walkill River forms the southeast boundary, dividing the town from Warwick. Rutger's Creek forms the northeast boundary, and the extreme eastern angle of the town is at the junction of this stream with the Wallkill. The southwestern branch of Rutger's Creek rises in the town of Greenville and flows into this town near Waterloo Mills, then northeast, and unites with the other branch on the northeast boundary. This stream drains a large portion of the town, receiving several tributaries from each direction, and along its valley the New Jersey Midland Railroad finds its way from Middletown, southward. A large tract of the Drowned Lands extends along the Wallkill in the southeast. The valley of Rutger's Creek is known as Rutger's Valley, a name quite largely in use through the suggestion of Mr. H. B. Allen, the correspondent of several newspapers, residing at Westtown.

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

There were undoubtedly a few very early locations made in this portion of Orange County, particularly along the disputed tract near the present line of New Jersey. To actually name the first settler cannot now be done with certainty after the lapse of a century and a half. Peter Kimber, Esq., now living at Unionville, and from whom much valuable information has been derived in the preparation of this chapter, states, from documents in his possession, that his great-grandfather, George Kimber, purchased the old homestead near Unionville in 1728, and settled there either then or very soon after. He had two sons, Peter and Samuel. Peter succeeded to the homestead, and Samuel, after living in this neighborhood for a time, went West and settled in Ohio.

The sons of Peter were George and James. George became the owner of the homestead, while James had a part of the farm. The present owner of this venerable residence is Peter Kimber, a son of George. He was born Aug. 14, 1806, and at the age of seventy-four still represents in the fourth generation the early pioneer upon the same farm. He has been elected justice of the peace for seven successive terms of four years each.

Among the records of "cattle-marks" in the clerk's office is the name of William Stenard, 1749. Assuming that this is not an error of the town clerk, his settlement must have been not many years later than that of Mr. Kimber. It is not easy to determine his location. It is the opinion of Peter Kimber and others that the Stenards were originally residents upon the New Jersey side of the line not far from Unionville; but that afterwards they removed further north into Minisink. This is sustained by the probability that when the town books of Minisink were opened in 1789, settlers recorded the marks which they had had in use for some years before, and had the date of their selection attached to the town records. Other names of the same family appear at a later date. In a similar way the name of Benjamin

Smith appears with the date of cattle-mark, 1769. He was very probably the first settler in the vicinity of the present Johnston Station, which for many years was known as Smith's village. Jonathan Shepherd's name appears under date of 1776. His location is mentioned below. Christian Schultz is mentioned as recording his cattle-mark 1773. He had mills in the north part of what is now the town of Wawayanda.

To more fully show early settlement we are fortunate in possessing the assessment-roll of 1775. It appears as assessment district No. 6, in the Goshen Precinct. We have no official description of its boundaries, as the books of Goshen Precinct were destroyed by fire. Joshua Davis was the assessor, and he resided a mile or more south of Slate Hill, on the well-known homestead; but the name of Mr. Davis is included in another assessment-roll, showing that he did not reside in the district which he appraised. It is evident that district 6, which we give below, began somewhat south of Mr. Davis' residence, and included a small portion of Wawayanda, with most or all of the territory of the present town of Minisink. Possibly there may be names then belonging to what is now the vicinity of Centre Point, in the southeastern portion of the town of Greenville. This assessment-roll has a very important advantage over other early documents, as it gives a full list of all the residents at a date more than a hundred years ago, including even men with neither families nor homesteads, and assessed for only a trifling amount of personal property.

"The above is a true list of the assessment taken in my District, Sept. 1775. JOSHUA DAVIS."

The following additional facts, based upon the "cattle-marks" recorded in town clerk's office from 1795 to 1797, are given upon the authority of Peter Kimber, Charles E. Stickney, Oliver E. Wood, H. B. Allen, and others:

Capt. John Wisner resided about a mile and a half east of Unionville, on the present Ketcham place.

John Whittaker and Reuben Whittaker were early residents of Unionville, and a part of their estate is now owned by Samuel Pearson.

Hezekiah Wilcox and Amos Wilcox lived near Waterloo Mills.

John Kimball resided at Drowned Lands, Lower Road.

Cornelius Van Vliet lived on the present place of Matthew Decker. He had two sons, Samuel and John.

Philip Lee located about two miles northwest of Westtown. Smith Lee, a son, is still living in that vicinity, and Alexander, a grandson of Philip, resides on the old homestead.

Sylvanus Loree and Eda Loree (probably Lowrey) resided about two miles east of Unionville. They or their ancestors owned a large tract of land, most of which is now the Halstead property.

William Lane owned a large estate in the east part of Minisink. He came in there before the Revolution. A portion of the same property is still in the hands of his descendants. The stone house, formerly the old homestead, was built in 1785.

Paul Lee resided near Philip Lee mentioned above, and a grandson, Lewis, now owns the same place.

Cotton Mather and Increase Mather, whose stanch old Massachusetts names indicate their native place, resided, the first near Westtown, the other east of Unionville a mile and a half.

David Christie located on the present place of Andrew Yerks, not far from Unionville. He was a captain in the war of 1812.

John Dunkin lived west of Westtown. He owned a tannery.

Aaron Ferguson settled near Westtown.

James Ferguson lived near Gardnerville.

Jonathan Shepherd lived on the Drowned Lands, where the Roberts Sons now own.

Jonathan Sayre resided on the road from Unionville to Westtown. Decatur Sayre, a son, is living in that neighborhood at the present time.

Noah Terry located near Gardnerville, on the present Osburn place.

Henry Tucker settled at Unionville, on the place where Lanson Dunn resides at the present time.

Jonathan Tuthill, a well-known citizen of peculiar characteristics, resided on the place now owned by H. R. Horton.

William Masters settled about one mile east of Unionville.

William McMullen located in the old Dr. Kearns neighborhood, west of Westtown.

Daniel Myers and John Myers lived northwest of Unionville, on the property now owned by David P. Clark. Daniel was the noted Indian fighter, who was in the Minisink battle.

John Ralphsnider resided on the "Lower Road."

John Rosecrans located where John E. Dubois now resides.

Samuel Schoonover settled near Westtown.

Samuel Ferguson lived on property now owned by David P. Clark.

Wilhelmus Cole is supposed by Peter Kimber to have lived on the New Jersey side of the line. He was a surveyor of the early times.

William Horton resided near Westtown.

David Allen, well known as a cancer doctor, owned the place which is now the property of the heirs of Green Clark. His children were James, Samuel, Lathrop, Anna, Maria, Gabriel, Irena, William, Joseph, Phebe, Henry B. The last named is the well-known newspaper correspondent of Westtown.

John Beers located near Unionville.

Jonathan Casterline settled on the place now owned by Charles Goldsmith, about a mile northwest of Unionville.

Benjamin Cole resided near Westtown.

Abram Clark was an early resident of Minisink, settling near Westtown.

Josiah Cole lived near Westtown.

Ezra Corwin settled not far from the same village.

John Neely was located in Minisink not long after the Revolution, and his descendants occupy to some extent the same property at the present time.

Jonathan Cooley was the first town clerk in 1789, and served two years. He was also chosen supervisor in 1793, and served four years consecutively. A descendant, Freegift Cooley, formerly owned the farm belonging in modern times to William H. Carpenter, in Wawayanda. The town clerk lived at Millsburgh.

Freegift Tuthill is a prominent name in the annals of the county. He was a member of the Goshen and Westtown Turnpike Company of 1812. Richard M. Tuthill was a member of the New York Legislature in 1845, and was subsequently deputy sheriff at Newburgh. His son, Charles H. Tuthill, served as town clerk in 1862 and 1863. Robert C. Tuthill had also served as town clerk in 1856 and 1857.

Hulet Clark is mentioned in the records as town clerk in 1819; supervisor in 1851, 1852, and 1853. His family was locally quite noted by reason of so many falling victims to the dysentery in 1825, six dying within sixteen days. Wm. H. Clark, member of Assembly, 1880-81, is a son of Hulet Clark.

Isaac Decker settled near Ridgebury in the year 1800. Dewitt Decker (of another family) was supervisor of Minisink in 1860 and 1861. His son, Henry D. Decker, served three years as town clerk, 1864-66.

Joshua Sayre was an early settler and a citizen of considerable prominence. He was a member of the New York Legislature in 1814, and supervisor of the town in 1820. His homestead was three-fourths of a mile south of Westtown, now owned by Dr. Topping, of New York. Daniel Dunning, grandson of Michael Dunning, of Goshen, removed to this town soon after the Revolution. His uncle, Benjamin Dunning, was killed at the battle of Minisink. Benjamin Dunning, a descendant of Daniel Dunning, was elected supervisor of the town for six consecutive years, beginning in 1814. He was also a member of the New York Legislature in 1824. John Bradner was a prominent citizen of early times. He was the first supervisor of the town, in 1788, and served four years consecutively.

FAMILIES IN TOWN, 1810 TO 1815.

Coming down to a later period, we find the means of giving an accurate list of the families residing on the present territory of Minisink sixty-seven years ago. The formation of the school districts in 1813 under the law of the previous year is recorded by giving the families included in each instead of by defining the boundaries. In the subsequent division into three towns some of these districts were intersected by the new lines, hence in giving them below some names may occur of persons who lived beyond what is now the boundary of Minisink, but the list must approximate very nearly to an accurate catalogue.

District No. 6 was evidently on the territory of both Minisink and Wawayanda, but the people of the present time will no doubt be able to locate the families correctly, on whichever side of the line they may belong. The district included the families of Widow Milicent Shepherd, Isaac Conkling, William Jackson, Benjamin Chapman, Benjamin Doty, Abraham Shepherd, George Everett, Joseph Van Cleft, Michael A. Jones, Benjamin Ayres, Noah Terry, Jasper Terry, Parshall Howell, Wm. Lane, David Lane, Wm. Horton, Thos. Ferguson, Joseph Stewart, James Lane, Jonathan Wood, Henry Taylor, William Ludlum, John Stewart, Jonathan Tuthill, Phineas Terry.

District No. 7 included the following families, viz.: those of John Neely, Jr., John Barrett, Jeremiah Holly, John Jackson, Benjamin Smith, James Hulse, Paul Stark, John Roberts, Silas Hemingway, Reuben Cash and three tenants, Widow Jane Stewart, Widow Sarah Howell and sons, Silas Stewart, Luther Stewart, John S. Terry, Jonathan Seely, Widow Knapp and sons, Widow Davis, Joshua Davis, David Murray and one tenant, David Mulford, Garret Wood, John Neely, William Stewart. This is the Smith village district of modern times, with perhaps some changes of territory, now known as No. 6, of Minisink.

Old District No. 10 included the following families, viz.: those of Jonathan Sayre, Joshua Sayre, Thomas Grier, Aaron Ferguson and one tenant, Timothy Doty, Joseph True, Adonijah Hatfield, William Montgomery, Paul Lee, James Walling, Howell Reeve, Levi Decker, Jonah Van Auken, Joseph Clark, Widow J. Walling, David H. Slauson, Daniel Lee, Wm. Monell, Cotton Mather, Hezekiah Loree and one tenant, Daniel Brown, Richard Whitaker, Jr., James Ferguson, Jacob Cole, John Mather, Samuel B. Cole, John D. Cole, Benjamin Stead, Edward Price, Israel Lee, Samuel Wright, Peter Bernard, Jonathan Mather, Widow C. Oakley, Philip Lee and one tenant, Henry Horton, David Allen, Anthony Clark, John Tine, Lewis Elston, Widow Aber, John Rosecrance, Jacob W. Cole. This is practically the Westtown District of old times, and, with some changes, the present Westtown District, now known as No. 4.

District No. 11, as formed in 1813, included the following families, namely: those of Daniel Corwin, Silas Corwin, Morris Polly, Garret Birney, Josias Schoonover, William Oakley, Selah Corwin, Jonathan Brown, Widow James Neely, James Armstrong, Wilmot Halstead, Widow Sarah Knapp, Amos Stark, George Cook, Widow Hoyt, Peter Corwin, Freegift Cooley, Nathaniel Mather, Cyrus Skinner, John L. Mackey, John Short, David Norris, Moses Reed, George Goble, Samuel Carter, Charles Durland, Jr., James D. Wadsworth, George W. Goble. This is known as the "old Rome" District, and some of the above names doubtless belong in Wawayanda.

District No. 14, as formed in 1813, included the following families, viz.: those of Widow Elizabeth Wisner, Increase Mather, Samuel Kimber, Abraham Clark, George Kimber, Joseph Hildreth, Nathaniel Chandler, Theodore H. Pierson, Heman Allen, Squire Lee, Sylvester Austin, Richard Whittaker, Peter Ayres, David Wright, Isaac Popino, Levi Moore, Martin Mires, John Hammet, Ephraim Ferguson, Widow Mary Bennet, Henry Brown, Joshua Case, Widow Esther Case, Jonathan Clark, James Clark, James Clark, Jr., Leonard Middaugh, James Gland, Jonathan Casterlin, David Christie, Widow Sarah Wilson, Widow Eunice Beers, Isaac Van Houston, Widow Catherine Clark, James Kimber, Widow Sarah Clark. This is the Unionville District, now No. 8, of Minisink.

District No. 15, as organized in 1813, included the following families, viz.: those of Caleb Jones, Amos Wilcox, Ebenezer Mead, John Case, Josephine Westfall, Daniel Myres, Samuel Ferguson, John Myres, John Myres, Jr., Jacob Myres, Charles Baird, Asa Wilcox, Hezekiah Wilcox, Nathan Wilcox, Benjamin Wilcox, Samuel Slauson, Daniel W. Myres, Nathan Spinner, Isaac Overton, John Garner, Jesse Carpenter, George W. Pelton, John Tuthill, Aaron Slauson, Benjamin Drake, William Buckbee, Elias Clausen, Victor Baird, Widow Doty, John Vail. This is the Waterloo District, now known as No. 1.

District No. 25 included the following families, viz.: those of Joseph Smith, David Allen, David Brown, Richard Whittaker, Jr., Hezekiah Loree, William Brown, John Tuthill, Anthony Clark, Ephraim Ferguson, Richard M. Tuthill, John Brundage, Cotton Mather, Phebe Bennet, Benjamin Kimber, Increase Mather, Nathan Wilcox, Peter Walker, Samuel Collins, Benjamin Ferguson, Widow Julia Brown, Martin Myres, James Ferguson, Thomas Ferguson, James Thompson, Widow Elizabeth Wisner, Samuel Kimber. This is the present Brown District, on the Lower Road, now numbered 5.

SLAVERY.

Records showing the birth of slaves are found in the town clerk's office. We give the first:

"A female mulatto child, named Charlotte, was born in this town by the mother, Mary, at the dwelling of the subscriber, on the 25th of March, 1809; also a male child, mulatto, named James, of the same, born on the 11th day of January, 1811, at the same place and town of Minisink.

"April 2, 1811."

"GEORGE PHILLIPS.

Similar notices are entered for record by Noah Terry, Uriah Hulse, James Dolson, Elizabeth Wisner, Joshua Davis, Esther Hornbeck, Josiah Rosecrance, Benjamin Sawyer, Silas Hulse, Nathan Hulse, Joseph Smith, Hezekiah Taylor, Jacob Cuddeback, Daniel Myres, Heman Allen, Jonathan Brown, Susan Carpenter, and several others.

EARLY PHYSICIANS.

Dr. Austin was an early doctor, about 1800 and later; he lived at Unionville. Dr. William Newkirk lived at Unionville; properly the successor of Austin. Dr. Horton practiced for many years; resided at Westtown. Dr. John W. Rafferty lived at Westtown; was somewhat eccentric, but a very skillful physician. Dr. Rosecrance was an early physician, of whom but little seems to be known. He died May 12, 1782, aged forty-five years.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

The town of Minisink was formed by authority of the general act of March 7, 1788, and its territory was a part of the Goshen Precinct of earlier times. As has been explained in another place (see Deerpark), there was an early precinct under the name of Minisink which perhaps covered some part of the present town, but which is dropped from the records after the settlement of the New Jersey boundary line.

The town, as formed in 1788, included the present towns of Minisink, Greenville, Wawayanda, and that portion of the present town of Deerpark which lies south of the old county line. This large town took its name appropriately from the small triangle at its western extremity, though there was historical significance in the name derived from a greater extent of territory, and worthy to be perpetuated by one of the civil divisions of the county. In the subsequent erection of the towns of Deerpark, Wawayanda, and Greenville, the southeasterly portion of the ancient territory clung to the old name, as it had an undoubted right to, and the present town of Minisink perpetuates that name, though it is now entirely separated from "Old Minisink."

There are valuable books in the office of the town clerk: the record of estrays, the record of cattle-marks, and the birth of slaves. From these the names of the early inhabitants have been largely secured. Indeed these, added to the general assessment-roll of 1775, make the list so perfect that there can scarcely be a person omitted who was living on this territory at the time of the Revolution, though they may not be accurately located in every instance, either with reference to town boundaries or to neighborhoods in the town.

EXTRACTS FROM THE RECORDS.

The importance of the following records will be seen at a glance by remembering that they date from 1789, that the names therein contained are in many cases those of settlers who had already been located on their respective farms for many years, and that the town of Minisink as then organized included the territory of the three present towns of Minisink, Greenville, Wawayanda, and for thirty-six years (1789 to 1825) a portion of Deerpark also.

THE BONDING OF THE TOWN OF MINISINK.

This was effected by papers recorded in the office of the county clerk, and bearing date July 15, 1869. The bonds were to be issued in aid of the Oswego and Midland Railroad Company, to the amount of $75,000. The bonds were issued in pursuance of the above action. The interest has been annually paid, but the principal remains a debt against the town.

V.—VILLAGES.

is said to be a reminiscence of the old dispute between New York and New Jersey as to the boundary line. This was in 1740, and the village, then consisting of only two or three houses, stood on the disputed territory. After the line was settled the village was still so near to New Jersey that it was called Unionville, in commemoration of the uniting of the two States in friendly relations. At the present time (November, 1880) it is a thriving village, having considerable trade and extensive railroad business. There are stores kept by Halstead & Bro., by Elston & Bro., by Mr. Van Fleet; hotels by Mr. Conkling, by Mr. Tuthill, and by Mr. Casterlin. Other business places are Hanford's carriage-shop and blacksmithing, Casterlin's harness-shop, Van Fleet's coal- and lumber-yard, Dr. Haines' creamery, Swezey's grocery-store, Caldwell's hardware-store and tin-shop, Tuthill's drug-store (late Whittaker's), etc. The station agent is Enoch Greenleaf.

INCORPORATION.

This was effected by filing the necessary petition and procuring the action of the court thereupon. The election for determining whether to incorporate or not was held Aug. 22, 1871. Joseph M. Case and Lanson Dunn presided, and the question was decided in favor of incorporation, fifty-eight to seven; and it was also determined to spend $150 the first year under the head of ordinary expenditures. The first officers were as follows, chosen Sept. 26, 1871: Isaac Swift, president; Lanson Dunn, Henry Tuthill, J. Harvey Hanford, trustees; S. D. Cadmus, treasurer; A. J. Tuthill, collector; C. M. C. Morrow, clerk. Subsequent years, elections in March:

- 1872.—Isaac Swift, president; Lanson Dunn, Dennis Clark, James H. Hanford, trustees; Charles M. C. Morrow, treasurer; Joseph D. Swift, collector; C. M. C. Morrow, clerk.
 1873.—Peter C. Hanford, president; Lanson Dunn, J. Harvey Hanford, Charles D. Van Fleet, trustees; Richard Casterlin, collector; C. M. C. Morrow, treasurer; N. C. Hanford, clerk.
 1874.—Peter C. Hanford, president; Lanson Dunn, Charles Van Fleet, Christopher Haggerty, trustees; Bradner P. Doty, collector; William Culverwell, treasurer; N. C. Hanford, clerk.
 1875.—Dennis Clark, president; Christopher Haggerty, A. W. Van Fleet, Wm. W. Tuthill, trustees; Asa D. Elston, collector; Wm. Culverwell, treasurer; N. C. Hanford, clerk.
 1876.—Dennis Clark, president; Andrew Van Fleet, Wm. W. Tuthill, J. Harvey Hanford, trustees; David Owen, collector; Wm. Culverwell, treasurer; N. C. Hanford, clerk.
 1877.—Dennis Clark, president; A. W. Van Fleet, W. W. Tuthill, J. H. Hanford, trustees; Bradner P. Doty, collector; William Culverwell, treasurer; N. C. Hanford, clerk.
 1878.—M. S. Hayne, president; Wm. W. Tuthill, E. Swezy, Jesse Rosencrans, trustees; T. J. Casterlin, collector; Wm. Culverwell, treasurer; N. C. Hanford, clerk.
 1879.—M. S. Hayne, president; Wm. W. Tuthill, J. Harvey Hanford, A. W. Van Fleet, trustees; Joseph D. Swift, collector; William Culverwell, treasurer; N. C. Hanford, clerk.
 1880.—M. S. Hayne, president; J. H. Hanford, A. W. Van Fleet, Wm. W. Tuthill, trustees; N. C. Hanford, collector; Wm. Culverwell, treasurer; N. C. Hanford, clerk.

Other officers for the first year were: 1871–72, B. P. Doty, street commissioner; William Green, police constable.

For the present year, 1880–81, Lanson Dunn, street commissioner; Richard Casterlin, pound-master; Joseph D. Kimber, police constable.

was the only village in the western part of the town at the time of its settlement, and undoubtedly derives its name from this circumstance. It is an old-time place, beautifully situated on elevated ground, commanding a fine view of the pleasant Rutgers Valley. Its present business may be summarily stated as follows: post-office, kept by Jonathan Sayre; store, general merchandise, by Edwin Hartwell; hardware-store and tin-shop, by F. and V. Linke; grocery-store, by Oscar Terwilliger; harness-shop, by

* After 1821 and prior to 1830 they were appointed by the courts in connection with the board of supervisors.

† After this date chosen at town-meetings.

J. DuBois, who has worked at the business fifty years consecutively; blacksmithing and wagon-shops, by Ira Parsons and by Samuel Sinsabaugh; creamery, by Squire Hill; Terwilliger's creamery, two miles or more away on the Lower Road; hotel, by Mrs. S. J. Fisk; shoemaker, Malcolm McPherson; coal, lumber, and feed, by J. V. Halsey; surveying, Alva Seybolt; and station-agent, John H. Sholl. The churches, the large school-house, and quite a number of fine private residences together make up a rural village that fairly challenges comparison with any other in this section of the county.

was a small hamlet on the east boundary of the town, and grew up around the mills located there. Like so many other villages in this county, it was named in honor of an early settler. Ira Gardner was a mill-owner and merchant at this point. (See Wawayanda.)

is on the north line of the town, the dwellings and the business places being mostly on the other side of Rutger's Creek, and hence in the town of Wawayanda. This place was formerly known as Racine, from Mr. John Racine, who was a prominent citizen residing there. The place is situated on the outlet of Binnenwater Lake. (See Wawayanda.)

JOHNSON POST-OFFICE

is located on the southern branch of Rutger's Creek, in the north part of the town. It is a station on the New Jersey Midland Railroad, O. Harden, agent. Cudney's store, a blacksmith-shop, and blacksmithing with wagon business by Wm. Elston, are about the only business enterprises to be mentioned.

SMITH VILLAGE,

so called, is a rural neighborhood a short distance north of Gardnerville. Formerly it was a smart business place. There were stores, hotels, and shops. The change of traveled routes and other reasons gradually led to the discontinuance of these. There is now little business worthy of note, and Smith village has become simply Smith neighborhood.

WATERLOO MILLS

are in the southwest part of the town, and the power is supplied by the southern branch of Rutger's Creek. The place is not far from the New Jersey Midland Railroad at its western bend in this town. The mills are now owned by Daniel Myers, lately by Mr. Kittell, who still runs a store. This is a point of early settlement, and there were doubtless mills here before 1800. As noticed elsewhere, the Willcoxes were early settlers and business men at this point.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

Under the earlier school law, the provisions of which seem to have been inoperative and quickly abandoned, school commissioners were chosen at the annual town-meeting of 1796 as follows: Henry Tooker, Jonathan Cooley, Jonathan Wood. In 1797 the same persons were chosen, except that John Bradner took the place of Jonathan Cooley, and those of 1797 were re-elected in 1798. This appears to have been the end of that earlier system.

During the years that followed, in which there was no official action recorded, schools were maintained by individual effort,—by subscription,—by charging each scholar one dollar a term. Mr. Oliver Wood, of Wawayanda, states that in his earlier years he taught by the scholar,—so that that practice was continued somewhat after the establishment of the general school system in 1812.

In the year 1813 the town complied with the provisions of the new school law,—voted to raise by taxation a sum for the support of schools equal to the amount offered by the State, and chose commissioners and inspectors, the former having authority to form, alter, or dissolve districts and distribute the public money; the latter examining teachers, certifying to their qualifications, and inspecting the schools. This system continued until 1843, and during that period the following persons served one or more years each as commissioners, the number annually chosen being three: George Phillips, Joshua Sayre, James Van Fleet, Jr., James Eldred, Jonathan Brown, Daniel Dunning, Joshua Van Auken, John D. Wood, Isaac Cook, David Robertson, Francis Kelly, Hulet Clark, Stephen W. Fullerton, Benjamin L. Manning, Squire Lee, Samuel Knapp, Charles Monell, David H. Slauson, Abijah Wells, Increase B. Stoddard, John Jackson, Wilmot Moore, Daniel W. Gedney, James Little, Benjamin Moore, Allen Irwin, Roswell Mead, Dorastus Brown, Increase Mather, Hugh McConnell, John Roberts, Frederick Dolsen, William Graham, Calvin Hallock, Wakeman B. Oakley, John C. Owen, Charles Mills, John Whiting, Charles S. Lee, Alfred Reed, Edward Shute, Richard M. Tuthill, James M. Reeve, Charles S. Lee, John L. Knapp, James F. Clark, Samuel Slauson, Jacob M. Johnson, Henry C. Halsey, Braddock R. Dunning, Daniel T. Howell, Jesse Green, Wallace Clark, William Dickerson, Henry Clark, James A. Smith.

During the same period the following persons served one or more years each as inspector of schools: Rev. Thomas Grier, Dr. John T. Jansen, Jr., John Peckham, Henry Ball, Jonathan Brown, Francis Kelly, James Scribner, Samuel Holbert, George Phillips, John S. Swezey, Alexander T. Bodle, Francis Kelly, Roswell Mead, Thomas P. Youngs, John Hallock, Jr., Jeremiah Van Auken, Stephen W. Fullerton, Isaac Cook, Phineas Terry, Marcus Stickney, Apollos Jessup, Gabriel Sayres, Solomon Van Fleet, James Hulse, Alexander Boyd, Simon M. Stoddard, Bryan Garrihan, Thomas Royce, Jonathan Carpenter, William H. Newkirk, James Hulse, Joseph Halsted, Jonathan Bailey, Harvey Horton, Merritt H. Cash, Harvey Hallock, Dorastus Brown, Horace Armstrong, George N. Wood, Roswell Mead, James F. Clark, Henry Clark, Seth Tompkins, Charles A. Dolsen, Richard M. Tuthill, William Monell, Erastus Stickney, Richard Hallock, Alexander I. Johnson, Increase Mathers, Dewitt C. Hallock, James M. Reeve, Horace H. Stewart, John C. McConnell, Lewis Armstrong.

The commissioners first chosen in 1813 divided the old town of Minisink into twenty-six school districts, under date of June 21st of that year. These are recorded in full, and we have included them in the chapters upon Deerpark, Minisink, Greenville, and Wawayanda, as the most concise and yet comprehensive method of determining the names of the families then residing upon this large territory.

Under date of Oct. 17, 1823, the commissioners erected district No. 28 out of the part soon after set off to Deerpark, with the following boundaries: "Beginning at the Delaware River, where the line of the lands of Stephen St. John and Samuel Caskey intersects said river; from thence running with said line between them northeasterly to the mountain; thence a northeast course to the line of the town of Deerpark, all northwesterly of said line to be a school district by itself." The next year, however, they united Districts 28 and 21, with the following boundaries: "Which district begins at the house owned by Nathan Van Auken, on the west side of the Neversink River, and including all the inhabitants on the west side of said river until it meets the Delaware River, and up said Delaware River to the house commonly called the old Lambert House, near where mills were formerly, and from said Lambert's House on a straight line to the place first mentioned." This is interesting as describing the territory of Port Jervis and vicinity just fifty-six years ago, when it was necessary to unite two school districts to have population enough to sustain a good school. The next year (1825) this triangular portion of old Minisink west of the Shawangunk Mountains was annexed to Deerpark.

After the change from commissioners and inspectors to supervision by town superintendents, the following were the incumbents of that office: 1844, James M. Reeve; 1845, Henry Clark; 1846, Erastus Stickney; 1847-48, Joshua Case. Elected once in two years: 1850, Charles B. Halstead; 1852, not recorded; 1854, Gabriel Post; 1855, Norris L. Bennett.

The law was then repealed and district commissioners appointed. At that time all control of the schools by town authority ceased.

At Unionville, near the New Jersey line, there is a flourishing private seminary conducted by Professor Hartwell. He had previously managed a similar institution in Cornwall.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE PRESBYTERIAN SOCIETY AT WESTTOWN met for legal organization at the house of Sylvanus Losee, Jan. 26, 1790. The certificate then executed was signed by John Hazen and James Brown, deacons, and the trustees named were James Brown, Frederic Delano, Henry Tooker, Amos Willcox, John Davis, Jr., and John Whittaker. This church is rather noted for the number of times it has deemed it necessary to effect a re-incorporation. March 10, 1803, a second certificate was recorded, including the names of Paul Lee, Jacob Cole, Ezra Corwin, Richard Whittaker, Joshua Sayre, and Cotton Mather. A third certificate, under date of Aug. 19, 1805, contains the names of Sylvanus Losee, Cotton Mather, David Christie, Ezra Corwin, Joshua Sayre, Israel Lee, Henry Tooker. A fourth certificate, under date of Sept. 14, 1807, contains the names of John Neely, Benjamin Cole, Cotton Mather, Ezra Corwin, Israel Lee, David Christie, Joshua Sayre, and Henry Tooker. A fifth certificate, dated March 28, 1842, contains the names of John Dunkin, Silas C. Brown, David W. Clark, Isaac M. Decker, Daniel Lee, Dorastus Brown, Virgil M. Dunning, Joel J. Bishop.

The earliest certificate above shows the original fact that the church was Presbyterian in 1790. The changes indicated by the above various papers are to some extent shown in the following valuable article by the pastor, Rev. L. T. Shuler:

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF WESTTOWN.

As far back as 1794 there was a Reformed Church at this place, for in that year letters were received by the Particular Synod of that body, from the "Congregations of Clove and Westtown, containing complaints that the licentiates had not visited them." Corwin's Manual gives the date of organization as 1791. In 1797 the Rev. Elias Van Benschoten accepted a call from the united congregations of Clove and Westtown. Some time before 1812 these congregations separated, as the following record shows:

"Whereas, Westtown congregation a few years past have separated themselves to another denomination, therefore we, the elders and deacons of the Reformed Dutch Congregation of the Clove, being convened in the house of the Rev. Elias Van Benschoten, in the township of Wantage, in the county of Sussex, and State of New Jersey, do hereby request the clerk of the peace for the county of Sussex to record us by the name of The Trustees of the Reformed Dutch Congregation of the Clove. Given under our hands and seals the second day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twelve, 1812.

"MICHAEL DECKER,
"MICAH DEEN,
"PETER VAN SICKEL,
"JOEL CROEL,
"BENJAMIN VAN SICKEL,
"LEVI AYERS, JR.,
"ISAAC VAN OCKEN."

The "other denomination" to which reference is made was undoubtedly the Presbyterian, for on March 10, 1803, the people of Westtown met at the house of Paul Lee, fifteen days' notice having been given, to incorporate themselves as a religious society according to the act passed March 27, 1801. Jacob Cole and Ezra Corwin were elected inspecting officers; Richard Whittaker, Joshua Sayre, and Cotton Mather were elected trustees to take charge of the estate and property, and to be known by the title of The Trustees of the First Presbyterian Church of Westtown. July 19, 1805, subscriptions were made towards the erection of a church edifice, to the amount of $1733.50. Just a month from that time the congregation met at the house of Sylvanus Losee, and elected Ezra Corwin, Joshua Sayre, Israel Lee, and Henry Tooker trustees. These trustees held a meeting on September 3d, and decided that the church building should be 50 by 40 feet, and that the floors should be laid with white-oak boards an inch and a quarter thick. Feb. 14, 1806, the contract was awarded to Daniel Gale, who was to frame and inclose the building, to build a pulpit and deacons' seat with stairs into the pulpit, and a canopy overhead, for the sum of $450, the materials being all furnished by the trustees, the work to be done by Nov. 1, 1806. The remainder of the work was done by Richard Whittaker and Paul Lee, for $900. The seats were sold the last day of November, 1807, but the church remained without a pastor until Sept. 5, 1808, when Rev. Thomas Grier accepted a call and began his labor. In December of that year Nathaniel Chandler, John Neely, Philip Lee, and Hezekiah Taylor were chosen elders. This number was increased in less than a year by the ordination of Garret Brink and Phineas Terry. The congregation at this time covered the territory now occupied by the churches of Westtown, Centreville, and Unionville, and extending along the Shawangunk Mountain from the borders of the town of Mount Hope into the State of New Jersey. The pastoral labors of Rev. Mr. Grier were wonderfully blessed. In the year 1815, 103 persons were received into the church, and 57 in 1816, all upon profession of their faith. In 1820 another revival resulted in the addition to the church of 194 members. In 1816 the eldership was increased by the election of Robert Carr, Samuel Van Fleet, David Christie, David H. Slauson, and Alexander Boyd. The Session then consisted of nine members, but the number was diminished by the death of one elder and the removal of three others. In 1823, James Van Bomel, James Arnot, Martin L. Mapes, Dorastus Brown, David Osmun, and Isaac Bodle were added to the Session.

The prosperous pastorate of Rev. Thomas Grier closed on Sept. 12, 1827. Shortly after this the church building was taken down, reframed, and reset. The new building was 38 by 48 feet, with a gallery on three sides.

Rev. Christopher Cory, of the Presbytery of New-ark, took charge of the church Oct. 30, 1828, and on Dec. 27, 1829, 101 persons were received into the communion. Mr. Cory severed his connection with the church Sept. 13, 1832. Rev. Theron C. Depew was called in April of the next year to serve the Westtown Church, together with its offspring at Unionville, which had been formed in 1831. During this pastorate Jeremiah Reeves, Lewis Stewart, John Duncan, and Morris W. Lee were elected elders of the Westtown congregation. Mr. Depew closed his labors here April 17, 1838, and Rev. T. C. Holliday supplied the pulpit for a short time. At a meeting of the church and congregation held on Dec. 29, 1838, a portion of the members withdrew, with the moderator and clerk. Those who remained reorganized, and authorized the Session to supply the pulpit.

At a congregational meeting held Sept. 5, 1839, at which William Johnson was appointed moderator, and John E. DuBois secretary, it was decided to adhere to the General Assembly, Old School. November 11th, David Christie, William Evans, and George Corwin were elected elders of the Old-School Church, and were ordained by the Rev. Thomas Holliday. The elders of this church were then Jeremiah Reeves, William Evans, Morris W. Lee, David Christie, George Corwin, and Roswell Mead. In November, 1840, Rev. Ralph Bull began preaching at Westtown, and in January of the next year he was installed pastor of the church. June 11, 1843, John E. DuBois and Henry C. Halsey were ordained elders, and William H. Newkirk, M.D., having been ordained as a ruling elder at Unionville, was declared to be one of the members of the Session. Owing to the number of deaths and removals the Session was reduced to one elder, and on May 25, 1865, the congregation met and elected Benjamin S. Dolson a ruling elder, and on the following Sabbath he was ordained to that office. During Mr. Bull's pastorate, which closed in September, 1866, 65 persons were received into the church upon profession of their faith, and 43 by certificate from other churches.

Rev. Duncan C. Niven was installed pastor of the church May 21, 1867. During his connection with the church 90 persons were added upon profession of their faith. The church edifice was also rebuilt and enlarged at a total cost of $10,600. Mr. Niven's resignation was accepted Oct. 1, 1875.

The present pastor, Rev. L. T. Shuler, began his labor here Oct. 1, 1876. Since that time 46 have united with the church upon profession, and 13 by certificate. The total number of communicants is 164; the Sabbath-school membership, 95.

The officers are as follows: Elders, John E. DuBois, John Rutan, George S. Sayer, Albert A. Seymour, M.D.; Superintendent of Sunday-school, Thomas S. Hulse; Assistant Superintendent of Sunday-school, Jonathan Sayer; Librarian, Charles Lain; Secretary, William H. Halsey.

There is a Ladies' Home and Foreign Missionary Society connected with the church, of which Mrs. M. L. Evans is president, and Miss Mary Louise King, secretary. Its meetings are held monthly. The regular church prayer-meeting, a young men's meeting, and a ladies' prayer-meeting constitute the regular week-day services. The parsonage and lot, which was donated in 1866 by the family of the late William Evans, is now valued at $1200.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF UNIONVILLE effected a legal organization March 20, 1803. The proceedings were signed by Thomas Grier and Herman Herrick. The meeting was held at "the common school-room of Unionville," and the trustees chosen were Richard Whitaker, Samuel Van Fleet, and James Clark. The sketch given below from the pastor of the church dates the organization from 1831, but the above record shows that in a legal sense movements for a separate organization from that of Westtown were much earlier. In 1853 there is also recorded a certificate under the title of the New-School Presbyterian Church of Unionville, containing the names of Benjamin Van Fleet, Peter C. Hanford, Henry D. Elmer, Marcus S. Hayne, and Asa Smith.

"A petition signed by sixty-seven members of the Presbyterian Church in Westtown, N. Y., requesting to be set off from said church with a view of being organized into a Presbyterian Church at Unionville, N. Y., was presented to the Presbytery of Hudson by Joseph A. Bonnell, Sept. 14, 1831. Whereupon Presbytery granted said petition, and appointed a committee consisting of Rev. Messrs. Timlow, Cummins, and Wood, who organized a church at Unionville Sept. 20, 1831, composed of the following persons: Samuel Van Fleet, Sarah Van Fleet, Richard Whitaker, Jane Van Fleet, James Van Fleet, Mary Van Fleet, Hannah Pierson, Berny Middaugh, Sarah Middaugh, Leonard Middaugh, Moses D. Rogers, Mary Clark, Susan Whitaker, Deborah Smith, Phebe M. Smith, Jacob Whitaker, Martha Whitaker, Samuel V. Myers, Stephen G. Smith, Daniel Myers, Julia Myers, Hannah Myers, Catherine Myers, William O. Smith, Isaiah Clark, Samuel Van Fleet, Jr., Belinda Van Fleet, Jane V. Pierson, Elizabeth M. Pierson, Elizabeth Pierson, Joseph A. Bonnell, Joanna Bonnell, Timothy Scidmore, Alfred Bullock, Hannah Bullock, Theophilus H. Pierson, Mary Austin, Elijah Middaugh, Anna Scidmore, Nancy Watkins, Elizabeth Kimber, Caty Kimber, Jane Shepherd, Eliza Jane Shepherd, Lewis Whitaker, Phebe Whitaker, John Whitaker, Samuel Clark, James Clark, Catharine Clark, Abraham Clark, Frances D. Clark, Jane Miller, John C. Wisner, Sally Conger, Jane R. Clark, Joanna Smith, Harminda Smith, James W. Dekay, Thomas Miller, Abigail Miller, Mary Carr, Lydia Fuller, Hannah Clark, Jonathan Clark, Abraham Irwin, Mary Irwin, Caty Middaugh.

"The Presbyterian church was built in 1825, at a cost of $2500; size, 46 by 36 feet. The building was subsequently remodeled and enlarged, and, more recently, a lecture-room was added. A parsonage was purchased in 1850. The pastors and stated supplies have been Rev. Theron C. Depew, supply, from November, 1832, until October, 1834; Rev. Peter Hanouse, supply, from June, 1837, until November, 1839; Rev. A. O. Peloubet, pastor, from September, 1840, until January, 1845; Rev. T. S. Ward, stated supply, from April, 1846, to September, 1846; Rev. Augustus Seward, pastor, from April, 1847, until September, 1849; Rev. Nathaniel Pierson, pastor, from October, 1850, until November, 1857; Rev. H. F. Wadsworth, pastor, from December, 1858, and still continued in charge, 1880.

"The following is the list of elders: Samuel Van Fleet, Moses D. Rogers, Samuel Van Fleet, Jr., Alfred Bullock, Lewis Whitaker, Joseph Chandler, Benjamin Moffat, Benjamin Newkirk, Peter C. Hanford, Benjamin Haynes, John Smith, Benjamin Van Fleet, Marcus S. Haynes, Levi Truex, Jesse Owen, Gamaliel Russell, Isaac Swift, Asa Smith, Samuel Hartwell, Jonathan L. Whitaker, James H. Hanford.

"The Sabbath-school has been in successful operation since the organization of the church, and is now in a prosperous condition. The present officers of the church are H. F. Wadsworth, pastor; Isaac Swift, Marcus S. Haynes, Asa Smith, Samuel S. Hartwell, Jonathan L. Whitaker, James H. Hanford, elders; Asa Smith, Dennis Clark, Jonathan L. Whitaker, James H. Hanford, Ezra Smith, trustees."

THE ORANGE BAPTIST CHURCH OF UNIONVILLE effected a legal organization Feb. 21, 1855. The proceedings were signed by William Tuthill and Richard A. Lain. The pastor of the church was Rev. J. T. Grimley. The trustees chosen were David Lain, William Tuthill, and Elijah Bennett. This legal paper represents a church of much older date, as shown in the following sketch furnished by the pastor:

"The Orange Baptist Church of Unionville was organized in the fall of 1822. It was composed of 125 members, all of whom brought letters of dismission from churches in the vicinity round about. One hundred came from the Second Baptist Church of Wantage, N. J., 7 from the First Baptist Church of Wantage, and 18 from the Baptist Church of Brookfield (now Slate Hill), N. Y.

"Its first and only house of worship put up for its own use was built in the spring and summer of 1822, and was ready for occupancy when the church was organized. It stood about a mile and a half southeast of what is now the village of Unionville. About thirty years after it was built it was removed to Unionville and remodeled. It was a plain wooden structure, 52 by 34. Subsequently a lecture-room, 30 by 26, was joined to it at the rear end, which cost about $1800.

"The church also built a house of worship in 1827, at Mount Salem, Wantage township, N. J., for the better accommodation of some of its members who resided in that place. Those members, to the number of 100, afterwards took letters of dismission and organized themselves into a separate church.

"The names of the first deacons of the Orange Baptist Church were David Lain, Joseph Smith, James Rosecrance, and Peter Roloson. Mr. Lain was a well-to-do, thriving farmer, who lived on what is generally known as the Lower Road. For a time he was the largest tax-payer in the town. He was a pillar of the church, both financially and spiritually. He reared a large family of children, who became prominent and worthy members of society. Seven of them, at this date, are residing in their native town.

"At an early period of its history the church organized a Sunday-school, and has kept it up with varying degrees of interest and success during the summer months until now.

"Recently a parsonage has been purchased in the village. The house is a two-story Gothic building, 38 by 32, with a one-story attachment in the rear, 20 by 16, for kitchen and wood-house. The property with some necessary improvements cost $1300.

"Ten men have served the church as regular settled pastors. Their names and terms of service were as follows: Zelotes Grenell, eleven years; Samuel White, one and a half years; Samuel Grenell, five years; Samuel L. Barrett, five years; C. Cox, two years; David Bennett, two years; Joseph I. Grimley, twelve years; Wm. H. Runyon, seven years; Levi Morse, four years; J. N. Adams (present pastor), five years, and the sixth begun.

"The present board of deacons is composed of R. A. Lain, George McBride, and E. Inman Case. A vacancy has lately been caused in the board by the death of Jeremiah Sergeant, who had served the church faithfully for seven years. Mr. J. Anson McBride is the clerk of the church and the superintendent of the Sunday-school. The present trustees (1880) are Messrs. Wm. Elston, Edward Wilson, Walter Van Sickle, J. A. McBride, and Justus Clark.

"The church has always been in comparatively easy circumstances financially; never much in debt; never much weakened by intestine troubles; has always sustained missionary and other benevolent causes, and has been frequently favored with religious revivals, which have resulted in the conversion of many to Christ, and in its own encouragement and prosperity. It has a present membership of 175, and is especially associated with that denomination of American Christians commonly called Strict Communion Baptists."

"OLD ROME CHURCH."

The old church was sold, according to previous notice, on Wednesday, Feb. 25, 1874, to Jehial Gregory, for the sum of $205, who purchased it in the interest of the inhabitants of Johnson's Station. This old church has its history, and few have a better record. Located in the town of Minisink, on the cross-roads leading from Westtown to Middletown, and from Johnson's to Millsburgh, it has kept company with the district school-house since 1835. From the old deeds I copy the following facts concerning its early history.

On April 18, 1835, Nathaniel Knapp and Sophia, his wife, executed to John Edwards, Daniel Brown, Isaac Denton, Hulet Clark, Lewis Finch, and John

G. DeBow, trustees, in trust, the land on which to erect a house of religious worship under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The deed was drawn, and acknowledgment taken by Roswell Mead, the commissioner of deeds for the old town of Minisink, and recorded May 30, 1835, by L. L. Vail, clerk of Orange County. Of the persons whose names appear on this old document, either as trustees or clerical, all have passed away save one, John G. De Bow, now residing in Newark. Work was commenced on the building early in the season of 1835, and in November the house was dedicated to the worship of God. Manning Force, one of the pioneers of Methodism in Northern New Jersey, was presiding elder, and Rev. Joseph Chattle was preacher in charge. The entire cost when finished and ready for worship was $1000, and paid for at completion; so no official record stains its modest reputation with the modern mortgage embellishment. At the time of its completion there was no Methodist church nearer than the Wantage church near Deckertown, none at Port Jervis, Otisville, Middletown, or Goshen. After having been in service up to the year 1870, an attempt was made to remove it to Centreville by a portion of the congregation, and being resisted by the balance, it became the subject of litigation.

In the mean time a church having been built at Centreville, and the litigating parties mutually agreeing among themselves upon terms of settlement, which were that the old church should be sold at public auction, and the proceeds given to the Church Extension Society; the sale just made is for the purpose of carrying into effect those terms of settlement.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH AT WESTTOWN.

This church was organized in 1863 from a portion of the membership of the church near Millsburgh, known as the "Old Rome church," which had been the chief centre of Methodism in this part of the county since 1835. The building in which the society worships was originally built as a house of worship by the New-School Presbyterians. And upon the reunion of the New- and Old-School Presbyterians, the building was purchased by the Methodists, and has since been used by the denomination as a place of worship. The present membership is 150. Services held Sabbath mornings and evenings. The following is a list of the pastors and supplies who have served the church since its organization: 1863-64, James H. Runyan; 1865-66, C. E. Wambaugh; 1867, W. W. Vorhees; 1868-69, S. H. Switzer; 1870, H. C. McBride; 1871-72, C. E. Walton; 1873-74, T. R. Stratton; 1875, A. J. Fritz (supply); 1876-78, J. A. Gutteridge; 1879-80, E. V. King.

The church has a flourishing Sabbath-school, and an out-appointment at Gardnerville. The present official record (1880) is as follows: Pastor, Rev. E. V. King; Trustees, Jeremiah Bennett, Dallas Clark, George C. Lee, W. H. Clark, J. L. Davis, H. B. Allen, was incorporated by a certificate executed Oct. 2, 1787. The meeting was held at the house of Benjamin Smith. Joshua Davis and John Bradner were the inspectors of election, and the trustees named in the instrument were Joshua Davis, Benjamin Smith, and John Monell. The same society it appears made a re-incorporation in 1799, under the name of "The Presbyterian Congregation west of Drowned Lands in the town of Minisink." The names contained in the instrument were James Steward, Sr., and James Steward, Jr., Israel Hallock, Jr., John Neely, Silas Steward, and John Knapp. The two sets of names are, however, entirely different, as perhaps they naturally would be at a distance of thirteen years. These are evidently some of the preliminary movements which led to the establishment of the Presbyterian Church at Ridgeberry,* though from a comparison of the names it may be inferred there was an intention at first to locate the church farther south.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF DROWNED LANDS, PRECINCT OF GOSHEN,

THE UNIONVILLE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH executed a certificate of incorporation July 21, 1868. The paper was signed by James Buchanan and William H. Foster. The trustees chosen were Bowdewine Van Sickle, Jacob Wilson, James A. Bulkley, James Buchanan, Eber L. Brown, Jeremiah Bennett, and Isaac E. Foland. The same society made a re-incorporation two years later by a certificate bearing date Oct. 17, 1870, which contained the names of Thomas J. Ritch, W. H. McBride, Bowdewine Van Sickle, James Buckley, Sanford Hough, Jacob Wilson, S. D. Cadmus, G. C. Hutchison, David P. Clark, Isaac E. Foland, Thomas W. Benjamin. With the numerous organizations of the Methodist Church at points comparatively near to Unionville, it has been difficult to sustain the enterprise at Unionville. Services have been somewhat irregularly maintained, but are now (August, 1880) at least temporarily suspended.

MEADVILLE BAPTIST CHURCH

made a legal organization at the house of Ebenezer Mead Dec. 30, 1815. The proceedings were signed by John Myers and Jacob Bockoven, deacons. The trustees chosen "to superintend the building of a meeting-house on the lands of Ebenezer Mead" were Israel Lee, John Myers, Sr., John Myers, Jr., Samuel Master-son, and Ebenezer Mead. This was the foundation of a church now located at Mount Salem, N. J. The building at Meadville was never finished.

wreck, that was originally built for a union house of worship. It was occupied by the Christian or Unitarian denomination for a time; by the Primitive or Old-School Baptists; by the Methodists; by the Presbyterians,—each and all claiming it by virtue of their original aid in building the same, or by reason of its avowed union character. When first built it was a neat rural chapel, and was dedicated some years previous to 1840. It has now been unoccupied for a long time.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

THE MINISINK CEMETERY ASSOCIATION

was incorporated Sept. 27, 1862. The meeting for organization was held at the burying-ground, and Ralph Bull was called to the chair, J. P. Snook chosen secretary. The trustees named in the certificate were Joseph Davis, Samuel Christie, George D. Wilson, Jonathan D. Sayre, Jonathan S. Christie, William A. Sayre. This association was formed to care for and enlarge the old Minisink graveyard, south of Westtown, that dates back to the earliest settlement. The ground is surrounded by a substantial wall and is in neat preservation. It is a specimen of what some reasonable care with no very heavy expense will do for even an old cemetery. The citizens may well take pride in their attempt to preserve instead of destroying (as in too many other places) the graves of their ancestors. In the absence of all early dates, but little history can be gleaned from this inclosure. Mr. H. B. Allen speaks of having seen one date of 1765, or about that, but the initials were illegible. That of Dr. Rosecrans, as reported by Mr. Hanford, is mentioned elsewhere.

Other burial-places may be catalogued as follows: one in the Brown school district, mostly a family lot, of considerable age; a cemetery at Unionville fitted up with modern taste; an old one beyond Waterloo Mills, near the line of Greenville; old Rome Cemetery, on the road south of the Rome neighborhood; another one at old Rome, mostly the Halstead family; and there are doubtless still others.

IX.—LODGES,† SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, Etc.

THE WESTTOWN LIBRARY was founded by an association formed Feb. 14, 1826. The trustees named in the papers were David Slau-son, Daniel Mead, William H. Newkirk, Charles Monell, Caleb Howell, Howell Reeve, and Enos G. Gridley. This institution existed for some years. There was a valuable collection of books, and the influence upon the community was of an excellent character. Many who are now in middle life or in advanced age acquired much valuable education from

† There was a Masonic lodge in town in old times, chartered Dec. 7, 1803. It was located at Westtown. One of the latest members was the well-known Isaac Decker. The lodge met in what is now known as the Westtown Academy. (See General History, Benevolent Societies.)

this early library. More who then studied the history of their own county and of other counties through the substantial books placed within their reach may well sigh over the present age, when so many young men can be found who have never read even a history of the United States, but are perfectly familiar with the latest "dime novel." The library was finally scattered, the books being divided among the stockholders.

THE WESTTOWN CIRCULATING LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

executed a certificate of incorporation May 2, 1877. The meeting to organize was held at the academy, and Thomas S. Hulse appointed chairman, A. J. Jessup, secretary. The trustees chosen were Thomas S. Hulse, Lawrence T. Shuler, Charles W. Horton, Andrew J. Jessup, Jonathan Sayre, Miss Mary J. Sayre, and Miss Belle Lee.

The shares were made five dollars each, to be paid down, and one dollar to be paid annually upon each share. This library, recently established, is now in circulation, and an excellent class of books have been purchased.

THE WESTTOWN LITERARY SOCIETY,

Rev. E. V. King, president, is an association for literary improvement, and well maintained.

This with the library above named and other improvements indicate a degree of culture and a taste for the higher and nobler pursuits of life which reflect much credit upon the people of this pleasant rural village and upon the surrounding community.

X.—PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

A very old homestead in Minisink is a part of the present hotel at Westtown, now kept by Mrs. Sarah J. Fiske. It is supposed to have been built more than one hundred years ago.

A very noted affair of early times was the spurious "Chechung Bank," for the manufacture of counterfeit coin. Its theatre of operations was near Westtown. "Chechung" is said to mean "I-chuck-you-in," and was first applied to a small creek where an Indian was said to have drowned a man. The place where the counterfeiters operated is still pointed out in a retired swamp on the farm now owned by Harry McBride. The end of the affair was State's prison for some, flight for others.

In the Revolution there stood on the banks of Rutgers Creek, near the present residence of Archibald McBride, an early dwelling of the Horton family. In one of the frequent alarms (perhaps it was at the battle of Minisink) Mr. Horton went away to assist in the defense of his neighbors. The family were left alone. Evidences of attack or a vivid imagination alarmed them. They suffered untold horrors. One daughter was taken with fits through fright. The water rose around the house, and after two days they fled,—a daughter-in-law and two children on horseback, the mother walking by the side of the horse.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The present farming of the town is an active and prosperous business. Its character has been considerably changed, as in other sections, by the opening of the railroads, and the opportunity of selling milk direct to New York. There are some who believe that the process is not, on the whole, likely to develop more wealth than when dairy products were manufactured at home. It is a proverb somewhat in use, "He who sells milk has nothing else to sell."

XII.—MILITARY.

The early Indian wars, the struggles of the Revolutionary period, all involved the entire Minisink region in the dangers and horrors of border warfare. With reference to the people then living upon the territory now constituting the town of Minisink we have only the traditions, the anecdotes, the wild tales of blood and danger which have floated down the line of the generations. The main facts connected with those stormy periods are recounted in this volume in the chapters devoted to the general Revolutionary annals of Orange County, or in the special story of the battle of Minisink. As everywhere else, there are prevalent many stories of that bloody affair. Mr. H. B. Allen, of Westtown, is a very good witness for determining the truth of some of these stories of border warfare. Three of the survivors of the Minisink battle lived to within his time, viz.: Mr. Harding, Daniel Myers, and Moses DeWitt; and Mr. Allen conversed with them upon the subject.

WAR OF 1861-65.

This town furnished volunteers as follows:

At the outbreak of the war.....	3
Prior to July, 1862.....	14
Under call of July, 1862.....	43
From July, 1863, to July, 1864.....	28

Under the enrollment in 1863 the town had 131 in the first class and 63 in the second; of this number 31 were drawn, 15 of whom were held to service and paid commutation. Enlisted after the draft, one,—Charles Colden, colored.

By voluntary subscriptions in 1862 the sum of $1083 was raised to promote enlistments. The Presbyterian Church at Westtown sent stores to hospitals valued at $70.

At a special town-meeting held Feb. 25, 1864, it was voted to authorize the payment of a town bounty of $100.

Another special meeting was held March 31, 1864, at which the above offer of $100 was again adopted, but by a singularly small vote,—18 for and 2 against.

Aug. 11, 1864, a tax of $25,000 for the payment of bounties was approved, and the amount of bounty to each left to the discretion of the town board. Bonds were directed to be issued payable in eight equal annual installments, on the 1st of February, 1865, and each year to 1872 inclusive. Of the sum authorized, $22,500 was expended.

Hubert Clark

Jan. 18, 1865, a tax of $15,000 was authorized for bounty purposes, to be disbursed by the town board at the rate of $200 to each volunteer for one year, $300 for two years, and $400 for three years. Under settlement of this call (Dec. 19, 1864) the town was allowed an excess of thirty-one years, $6200, and for volunteers, $6308; total, $12,500.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

HON. HULET CLARK.

His grandfather David was of English descent, and lived and died in Westchester Co., N. Y. Caleb, father of Judge Hulet Clark, was born in Westchester County in 1760. He married Jemima Kniffen, and their children were Hulet, of whom this sketch is written; Wallace, married Sarah Smith; Jerusha, married Moses Durland, and lives in Greenville; David, married Nancy Slauson, and after her death Betsy Manning; Phebe, married Lewis Seybolt; Jas. F., married Abbie Hallock, and lives in Greenville.

Caleb Clark moved to Otisville, Orange Co., N. Y., about 1796, and a few years afterwards into Minisink township, where he died in 1840. Judge Hulet Clark was born in Bedford, Westchester Co., N. Y., March 26, 1790. His childhood was spent at home, and the common schools were his only educational advantages. In 1812 he married Mary, daughter of Zebulon Hallock, of Greenville, and their children were Chauncey H., who married Angeline Slauson, and afterwards Mary Corwin, and lives in Wawayanda; Alfred, Bertha, Samuel J., James Monroe, Henry Hallock, and Zebulon H., all of whom died in August, 1825. His wife Mary died Sept. 2, 1825. Soon after his marriage Judge Clark commenced farming on the farm now owned by Hulet Manning, of Greenville. April 1, 1828, he bought 420 acres of land in Minisink, which still remains in the family, and there lived, following agricultural pursuits the remainder of his life. In 1814 he received a commission as captain of a company in the One Hundred and Forty-eighth New York Regiment of militia from Governor Tompkins, which he held six years. He was afterwards commissioned major, and served until 1826, when he was again commissioned as colonel of the same regiment by Governor DeWitt Clinton, and served for eight consecutive years. He was town clerk in 1819-20; justice of the peace from 1821 to 1834; and judge of the Court of Common Pleas from 1834 to 1840. Politically he was a Democrat, represented his town in the board of supervisors, and was chairman of that body in 1851. Judge Clark was an active, energetic business man. He kept his engagements with scrupulous integrity, and was regarded as a man of sterling worth and a representative man of his time. He was a director of the Highland Bank of Newburgh for many years. He was a man of positive character, and although dignified in his bearing, was Democratic in his principles in a large degree. He died March 31, 1857.

Nov. 30, 1826, Judge Clark married Emeline, widow of John Greenleaf, and daughter of Ephraim and Amy Forbes, of New London, Conn., and of this union were born Bertha, who lives on the old homestead; William H., who married Emily, daughter of Robert Robertson, of Wawayanda, and lives in Minisink; Caleb, who married Phebe A., daughter of Henry Decker, of Minisink; Elizabeth C., who married Gilbert W. Roe, and lives in Oshkosh, Wis.; and George Dallas, who lives on the old homestead. Emeline Clark died June 2, 1876. William Harvey Clark represents the Second District of Orange County in the New York Legislature, is supervisor of his township, and was chairman of the board of supervisors in 1876. He was one of the incorporators of the Middletown, Unionville and Water Gap Railroad, and has been its treasurer since 1874, and a director in its board since 1866. Caleb Clark studied medicine with Dr. Seymour, of Westtown, N. Y., was graduated from the Albany Medical College in 1862, and was assistant surgeon in the Ninety-second New York Regiment in the late war. He now carries on a farm of 200 acres of land in Minisink. George Dallas Clark is a successful farmer and a man of good judgment in his business affairs.

COL. JOHN C. WISNER.

His father, Capt. John Wisner, Jr., was the son of Gen. Henry Wisner, of Warwick, N. Y., and lived on the Wisner homestead in Minisink, which has been in the family name since 1766. He was a farmer by occupation, and an active man in his town. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Maj. Peter Butholp, May 16, 1790, and their children were Susan, married David Lee; Mary, died young; Elizabeth, married Richard Whitaker; Agnes, married Nathaniel Chandler; Anna, died young; Tira Maria, died young; Henry, deceased; John C., the subject of this sketch; Temperance Ann, married John Slauson; and Harriet, married Daniel Sayre. Capt. John Wisner, Jr., died April 23, 1811. His wife died Sept. 16, 1843.

Col. John C. Wisner was born on the homestead April 6, 1803. His father dying when he was a boy, he was somewhat early in life taught what it was to depend on himself. After getting a common-school education, at the age of nineteen he married Mary, daughter of Peter and Hannah (Fancher) Weed, of Fairfield Co., Conn., and commenced life as a farmer on the homestead. Here we find Col. Wisner attending to the duties of his fireside and farm during his lifetime. His children were Peter, born June 19, 1823, died in New York, July 5, 1852; William H., born Sept. 7, 1825, died in November, 1876; Andrew J., born Feb. 13, 1827, died in Australia, April 24, 1853; Gabriel, born Nov. 11, 1828, died March 7, 1866; Harriet, married Isaac E. Toland, and lives in Unionville, N. Y.; Lyman F., who went to Iowa when a young man, and is a banker at Eldora, Hardin Co., in that State; Elizabeth, married William E. Taylor, of Warwick; John, died a young man; Mary, born Sept. 19, 1840, married Isaac E. Toland, and died in 1867; and Sarah, who died in infancy. Col. John C. Wisner died Feb. 11, 1878. His wife died Feb. 10, 1870.

The following obituary notice is taken from the Middletown Argus:

J. C. Warner.

PETER WERRY.

His father, Peter, was born, lived, and died in the county of Cornwall, England, and followed agricultural pursuits during his life. He married Susan Ead, and their children were Susan, deceased; Mary, who married Edward Hill, and lives in Devonshire Co., England; Rebecca, who married William Smithem, and after his death, in 1856, came to America with her two children, William and Rebecca, and died in Wawayanda, Oct. 10, 1874; Betsey, deceased, who married Richard Gilbert, and whose children were Susan, Elizabeth, and Mary; Peter, subject of this biography; and John, who came to America with his wife in 1840, and settled in Sullivan County, N. Y., where he now lives. His children are Susan, Sarah Jane, and Wm. Henry. Peter Werry, the subject of this sketch, was born in the county of Cornwall, England, March 5, 1811. His father died when he was seven years old, and his mother when he was sixteen. The family, being large and in moderate circumstances, were thus left upon their own resources. At the age of eight Peter Werry commenced work. He had no school advantages, and his business knowledge was obtained entirely by experience. In 1834 he came to the United States.

For the first few years he was engaged in the construction of the Delaware and Hudson Canal at Port Jervis, and as a farm hand for Joseph Davis, Esq., and others. On Jan 5, 1839, he married Drusilla, daughter of William H. and Sarah (Gibson) Clark, of Warwick, and their children were Mary, married Robert Osborn, and resides in the town of Minisink; Harriet Adelia, married George Kerwick, of Sussex County, and died in Wawayanda, June 1, 1876, at the age of thirty-three; Drusilla, who resides at home; Margaret, married Floyd Baird, of Greenville, and died June 11, 1878, at the age of thirty; Charles P., died Sept. 5, 1872, at the age of twenty-three; Sarah Elizabeth, resides at home; and John J., who married Georgianna L., daughter of R. A. Lane, of Minisink, and resides on the old homestead. William H. Clark died April 21, 1867, aged seventy-seven years; his wife, Sarah, died March 1, 1877, aged eighty-seven years. They had ten daughters and two sons; eleven of them married and reared families, and six of them now live in the vicinity of their birth. From his marriage until 1846, Peter Werry resided at Big Island, in Goshen township. In the spring of 1846 he rented a farm of three hundred and sixty acres of land of Dewitt Howell, in the town of Minisink, and moved upon it. In 1849 he bought this land of the Howell heirs, and lived there until his death, June 14, 1879. Upon the homestead he built a house and commodious farm buildings and brought the land to a high state of cultivation. In 1862 he bought one hundred and thirty-two acres of land of Virgil Dunning, and in 1865 two hundred and forty-nine acres of L. L. Lane. At his death he owned seven hundred and forty-one acres of land in Minisink in one body. Peter Werry is an example of what a man can accomplish by his own personal industry. He was a farmer through life, and a frugal, hard-working man. In politics he was a Democrat, and held some of the minor offices of his town. He was prompt in meeting his engagements, and attended strictly to his own affairs. He was an attendant of the Methodist Episcopal Church at West-town and contributed towards purchasing its parsonage. Mrs. Werry now lives on the farm adjoining the homestead, where she moved in April, 1880.

Peter Kimber

PETER KIMBER was born Aug. 29, 1806, at Unionville, Orange Co., N. Y. He is a lineal descendant in the fifth generation of Casper Kimber, who came from England with his wife about 1728, and settled in the old Minisink Patent, at a place called Pellet's Island. He immediately bought about eight hundred acres of land, and lived there until his death. His children were George, Nathaniel, Ephraim, Isaac, Joseph, John, James, Zuby, and Elizabeth. George, great-grandfather of our subject, soon after his marriage purchased seventy-five acres of land in Wantage, N. J. He lived there but a few years when he bought two hundred and twenty-five acres in the Minisink Patent, and moved upon it about the year 1750. Since that time this land has been owned by his descendants, and is one of the oldest titles remaining in the same family name in Orange County. The stone wing of Peter Kimber's house was built by him prior to the Revolutionary war, and at the time of the Minisink massacre was used as a fort by himself and neighbors. George Kimber served in the war of the Revolution, and died a few years afterwards. His children were Sarah, Peter, Margaret, and Samuel. Peter, grandfather of our subject, was born on the homestead; was in the Minisink massacre, and served during the war of the Revolution. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Clark, of Minisink, and their children were Sarah, George, Catharine, Jane, and James. He inherited the old homestead, and lived upon it until he died, March 14, 1817. George, father of Peter Kimber, Esq., was born Aug. 29, 1781. He married Sarah Elston, and by her had the following children: Elizabeth, born April 29, 1800, married Leonard Wintermute, a farmer of Wantage, and died in Ohio, July 28, 1834; Hannah, born March 14, 1802, married Josiah Bennett, a farmer of Minisink, and died March 4, 1858; Peter, subject of this sketch; and Sally Maria, born Sept. 18, 1816, and married Jacob D. Miers, a farmer of Wantage, N. J. He lived upon the homestead, which he obtained by purchase and inheritance, during his lifetime, and there died Nov. 3, 1860. Peter Kimber, Esq., has always lived upon the Kimber homestead near Unionville. His boyhood was spent on his father's farm, in his father's grist-mill, and in obtaining an education which the common schools of that day afforded. He married Maria Litteer, Jan. 17, 1829, and their children are Joseph E., who married Jane Shorter, and lives at Unionville, N. Y.; Phebe Elizabeth, who married George W. Rhodes, a farmer of Vernon, Sussex Co., N. J.; John M., who lives at home; Merilda, who lives at home; Sarah, who married John L. Van Gorder, a farmer of Minisink; Mary Ann, who lives at home; and George Merrit, who lives at home. His wife died April 3, 1869.

Mr. Kimber worked his father's farm on shares until 1850, when he bought twenty-five acres of land near by, and built a saw-mill and cider-mill. These he carried on with his farming until 1860, when his father died and he came into possession of the homestead by inheritance and purchase. He has been an active, industrious, and successful business man.

Politically, he is a Jeffersonian Democrat, and has been honored by his townsmen with the office of justice of the peace from 1854 until 1881. He has also acted as overseer of highways, and constable and collector of his township.

He is a man of good judgment and temperate habits, and his counsel has been often sought by his neighbors. He now resides on the homestead, in a house recently built by him, and carries on his farm and mills. Mr. Kimber was an original stockholder in the Middletown, Unionville and Water-Gap Railroad, and is interested in the welfare of his town. He and his family are attendants at the Baptist Church of Unionville, towards which he contributed at the time of its erection.

H. S. Hayne

"Col. John C. Wisner, one of the oldest, most prominent, and widely-known citizens of the town of Minisink, died at his home, about a quarter of a mile from the village of Unionville, last Monday night. During his long and useful life deceased had occupied many important offices in the gift of the people, having served in the Assembly, in the board of supervisors, discharged the duties of justice of the peace of his native town, and was one of the bonding commissioners and directors of the Middletown and Unionville Railroad, in all of which positions he discharged the duties conscientiously and for the best interests of his constituents. Col. Wisner was a man of sterling worth, unblemished reputation, and of rare business sagacity, respected far and wide, and acknowledged to be one of the most enterprising and useful citizens of the town of Minisink. He was a Democrat by birth and education, and occupied a high position in his party, frequently presiding at its conventions. He was colonel of the old State militia of the town of Minisink at the time it was under the command of Maj.-Gen. Gilbert O. Fowler, of Newburgh."

M. S. HAYNE, M.D.

His great-grandfather, Frederick Hayne, came from Germany when young, and settled in Wantage, N. J., about 1775, upon a farm afterwards owned by James Coe. He married a daughter of Peter Decker, of Wantage, and there lived until his death. Peter Hayne, son of Frederick, was born in Wantage, May 28, 1760, and followed agricultural pursuits during his life. He married Martha Lewis, of Baskinridge, N. J., Aug. 5, 1784, and died on his farm adjoining the homestead. Their children were Frederick; Huldah, married James Evans; Benjamin, father of our subject; Lydia, married Jacob Wilson and afterwards Manuel Coykendall; Alva; Lewis; and Eliza, who married Evi Martin, a farmer of Minisink.

Benjamin Hayne was born Oct. 29, 1791, and spent his boyhood at home. At the age of seventeen he went to Morristown, N. J., and there learned the saddlery and harness-making trade, which he followed most of his life. In 1814 he established himself in business at Unionville, N. Y. In 1815 he married Milly, daughter of Richard Whitaker, and their children were Marcus S., subject of the sketch; Peter, who lives at Goshen, N. Y.; and Milly, who married Henry B. Lee, and lives in Chemung Co., N. Y. His wife Milly died Aug. 30, 1820, at the age of twenty-five. Benjamin Hayne afterwards married Charlotte Whitaker, sister of his former wife, and their children were Frances, wife of A. W. Van Fleet, of Unionville, N. Y.; Lewis, deceased; Henry, deceased; Caroline, wife of O. W. Cooke, of Passaic, N. J.; Jacob; and Martha, wife of J. B. Hendershot, of Hamburg, N. J. With the exception of the year 1816, which he spent in Sussex County, Mr. Hayne carried on his business at Unionville until 1831, when he bought a farm of 170 acres in Wantage, N. J., and there moved with his family. Three years afterwards he sold this, and after traveling in the West for a few years, returned, and in 1838 purchased another farm in Wantage of 166 acres. He lived there until his death, Nov. 12, 1843. His wife Charlotte died Dec. 7, 1869, aged sixty-five years. From 1814 until 1831 Benjamin Hayne carried on a large business in his line at Unionville, N. Y., and was regarded as a reliable business man and a good neighbor. He was a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church at Unionville, and one of its firmest supporters.

Dr. M. S. Hayne was born at Bloomerville, Sussex Co., N. J., Jan. 23, 1816. He spent his early life at home. At first he attended common school, and afterwards the Rankin School at Deckertown, N. J., where he became an assistant teacher, carrying on his studies at the same time. In 1838 he entered the office of Dr. Lynn, of Deckertown, and began the study of medicine. After remaining there one year he went to Ontario Co., N. Y., and continued his medical studies in the office of Sylvester Austin, M.D. Soon afterwards he entered the "Geneva Medical College," from which he was graduated in the class of January, 1841. The year of his graduation Dr. Hayne settled at Westtown, N. Y., and commenced to practice his profession. In 1843 he married Amelia, daughter of Samuel and Belinda (Dada) Van Fleet, of Westtown, and by her had two children, both of whom died in infancy. She died Jan. 30, 1848. In 1844 he moved to Mount Salem, Sussex Co., N. J., where he practiced medicine until 1846, when he located at Unionville, N. Y., where he has since resided. In 1849 he married Jane, daughter of Josiah and Hannah (Adams) Decker, and by this marriage were born Albert B., who died Oct. 12, 1876, at the age of twenty-six; Anna M., deceased; and Marcus P., a lawyer and city attorney of Tombstone, Arizona. She died July 16, 1856. Until 1870 Dr. Hayne followed his profession, and enjoyed a large practice in this section of Orange County. Since that time he has practiced only as a consulting physician. He has been a member of the Orange County Medical Society since 1841. In 1868 he built the Unionville Cemetery, as a private enterprise, and has carried on the same since. He is a director in the Farmers' National Bank of Deckertown, N. J., and also in the Middletown, Unionville and Water Gap Railroad, and was one of the original stockholders and main promoters of the enterprise.

Dr. Hayne was formerly a Whig, but has been identified with the Republican party from its formation, and is the present postmaster at Unionville, receiving his appointment in April, 1879. He is a member and elder of the Presbyterian Church, and contributed liberally towards the same at its erection. In 1865 he became interested in the "Unionville Creamery," with Samuel Christie, and since the death of the latter, in 1875, has owned and managed the same himself. He also operates a creamery in Wantage, and does a large business, buying most of the milk in that section. Dr. Hayne is esteemed by his neighbors as an honest, generous, liberal-minded man. On Jan. 12, 1858, he married Eliza A., daughter of Samuel and Jayne (Elston) Christie, one of the old and respected families of Wantage, N. J., and of this union was born one son, S. Christie, who lives at home and is in business with his father.

W A W A Y A N D A.

I. SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

WAWAYANDA is an interior town, lying in the western part of the county. Its outline is something of an irregular triangle, and, like that of other towns in the vicinity, difficult to be accurately stated by the cardinal points of the compass. It is bounded north by Mount Hope and Wallkill, east by Goshen, south by Warwick and Minisink, west by Minisink and Greenville. The area of the town, as stated in the last supervisors' report, is 12,982 acres. The total assessed valuation of the town was $814,630, and the tax collected on that basis $6466.70. The territory of the town is a part of the Wawayanda Patent, and individual titles should be capable of being traced back to the original grant.

II. NATURAL FEATURES.

The town is an irregular triangle, with the north line constituting the base. The Wallkill forms the southeast boundary, and Rutger's Creek the southwest, except for the northwest part, where the territory of the town extends beyond the creek. The surface of the town is rolling, and it is mostly drained by streams flowing south and southwesterly to Rutger's Creek, or east and southeast to the Wallkill. Various excellent water-privileges exist upon these streams, some of which were brought into use at an early day, as well as in later years.

In the southeast there is a range of hills nearly parallel to the Wallkill River, and there are other high lands in the northwest. The highest hill is in the northwest part, and bears the name of Jogee, from Joghem, who is said to have been the last Indian in this section of the country, one of the grantors of the lands, and whose cabin stood on the south side of the hill. The Drowned Lands occupy quite a portion of the southeast part of the town, on the angle between the Wallkill and Rutger's Creek. A large portion of them have been reclaimed.

Round Pond is a beautiful sheet of water situated in the south part of the town. Its name is emphatically correct. It is about one mile in circumference, very clear and deep. It has no visible outlet.

III. EARLY SETTLEMENT

It is not perhaps easy to determine the first settler within the limits of this town.

As early as 1738 the population of Goshen Precinct was 1017. This would probably equal only about 160 or 170 families. This was for the whole territory from the Hudson to the Shawangunk Mountains, and beyond in the lower neighborhood of Deerpark. But there is a statement of the population of Minisink of the same date, giving the total as 339, or about 60 families, so that perhaps the "lower neighborhood" was not included in the statement for Goshen.

It is probable that at the date above mentioned (1738) the population was in the vicinity of Port Jervis, Goshen, along the Hudson, and a few near the New Jersey line, in the vicinity of what is now known as Unionville.

It is safe to date the general settlement of Wawayanda as during the Revolution or at its close, though a few families were on this territory earlier.

The following notices of various families comprise about all the material respecting early settlement which can now be obtained from books or from the recollection of the older people now living as to the traditions related to them by their fathers. The generation that opened up these forests for cultivation has passed away, and the historian can no longer obtain his facts from "first hands," but must cull them from other sources, either of record or of tradition.

In further showing the names of the families residing in what is now the town of Wawayanda just before the Revolutionary war, we are fortunately able to give the assessment-roll of this section, made out for district No. 10 in the old precinct of Goshen, the last one, probably, made under provincial authority,—September, 1775. District No. 10, with James Little assessor, undoubtedly comprised most of the town of Wawayanda, perhaps extending eastward across the Wallkill, and including a portion of the present territory of Goshen, also extending westward to include any settlers in the north or northeast portions of Greenville. It is true there was another district (No. 6), of which Joshua Davis was the assessor, but it is evident that the assessor did not reside in his own district in every instance. The name of Joshua Davis is found in the roll of No. 10. A comparison of the names with those of other records shows that Joshua Davis' district was mostly the present town of Minisink, and there we have given No. 6. District No. 10 was the rich Dolsentown neighborhood, with considerable territory added, as shown above.

JAMES LITTLE.

John Hallock, ancestor of families of that name in this section of country, came from England before the Revolutionary war and settled at Mattatuck, L. I. At the commencement of the war he was doing military duty on the island, and left it when it was captured by the English. He then removed to Oxford, in Orange County, and was in the military service some time in the Highlands. His brother Daniel was acting as his substitute at the capture of Fort Montgomery in 1777, and narrowly escaped being taken prisoner. In 1783 he purchased 200 acres of land just south of the present village of Ridgebury. The land extended west, and included the site of what has been known as Brookfield. He gave the lot upon which the Old-School Baptist church of that place was erected. It is said that when he built his house, finding himself short of nails he traded off a new hat for one of less value, and with the difference was able to buy the nails needed.

John Hallock, Jr., son of John (1), was a man of ability, and very quick-witted, with a fund of perpetual good humor. These qualities brought him before the public, and he was elected to offices of various grades in the old town of Minisink before the division,—justice of the peace, town clerk, supervisor, twice a member of the Legislature, and also a member of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Congresses. His former residence is the place in late years of Randall Stevens, of Ridgebury.

His son, Dr. Dewitt C. Hallock, inherited a large share of his father's talents. He was town clerk of Minisink for two or three years, and after the formation of Wawayanda was supervisor of this town for 1802 and 1803. He was a good surveyor, and had an extensive medical practice. He was also noted for extraordinary powers as a violinist, exceeding, it was claimed, any player in the State.

Rev. Richard Denton was born in Yorkshire, England, in 1586; graduated at Cambridge, 1623, and settled as minister of Coley Chapel, in Halifax, England; but in consequence of the restrictions placed upon the independents and non-conformants, emigrated to Boston with Governor Winthrop in 1630. He preached in Watertown, Mass., and subsequently at Wethersfield and Stamford, Conn. In 1644 he emigrated with a portion of his congregation and commenced the settlement of Hempstead, L. I.; returned to England, and died in 1662, aged seventy-six years. His sons were Richard, Samuel, Daniel, Nathaniel, and John. Nathaniel and Daniel removed to Jamaica in 1656, and were instrumental in settling the place. Daniel in 1670 published the first history of the colony of New York. John removed to Orange County, and is the immediate ancestor of those of that name here. James, his son, had four sons,—Amos, John, William, and Thomas. William and John settled in Orange County, but William returned to Long Island, near Beaver Pond, and died there. John located on the old Carpenter farm in the village of Goshen. He had three wives and fourteen children. His first wife was Jane Fisher, of Long Island; the second, Elizabeth Wisner, daughter of Henry Wisner, Esq.; the third, Mary Gale, daughter of Hezekiah Gale, who lived near what is now called Lagrange.

One of the daughters of Thomas married Jason Wilkin, who resided at the place last named. Catharine, a daughter of Samuel, of Long Island, married Jacob Mills, Esq., of Wallkill, and had twelve children, one of whom, William Wickham Mills, married the only daughter of Wickham Denton, of Long Island.

Mr. Richard Carpenter was an early settler at this location, and owned 100 acres. He lived in a log cabin on the hill, made potash, and farmed it a little. After him the farm was owned by Elisha Eldridge, from New England, who was the first man who kept a store and set up a tavern at the place. This was about the commencement of the Revolution.

Before the French and Indian war, in 1756, Isaac Dolsen came from Fishkill, Dutchess Co., and settled there, at what has long been known as Dolsentown. He purchased 700 acres, which was afterwards owned by Theophilus Dolsen, James Post, James Aldridge, and Mr. Swezey. Dolsen was a millwright, and married Polly Huzzy, of an English family in New Jersey, and died in 1795. His children were James and Isaac; James married Phoebe Meeker. Their children were James, Asa, Samuel, Polly, and Abby,—all of whom are dead but Samuel, who is eighty-two years of age. Isaac never married. This family is Dutch, and very old in the State. There is a family tradition that the first male child born in New Amsterdam (New York) was a Dolsen.

On the farm of Asa Dolsen, the grandfather of Samuel, there was a block-house, erected as a protection against the Indians in the French war of 1756. Dolsen lived first in a log house, loop-holed for musketry, and afterwards and before the war built a stone house, into which the inhabitants used to flee for safety as well as into the block-house.

Daniel Cooley settled on 100 acres adjoining Isaac Dolsen at about the same time Dolsen located.

David Cooley also located on 200 acres in the vicinity about the same time. During the French war the Indians came and killed a man in Dolsen's meadow by the name of Owens, and he then removed to Goshen, where he stayed till the war was over. The Indians did not come in great numbers to this settlement, but only a few at a time, who secreted themselves in the woods of the neighborhood, and as opportunity served sallied out to rob and to murder. On one occasion three of them chased a man, who ran and crept under the weeds and brush at the root of a tree which had been blown down; the Indians came, stood upon the tree, looked all around, yelling most savagely, but fortunately did not find him. In old times it was customary to build ovens to bake in in the vicinity of the house, and at the time we speak of a woman in the family of Mr. Cooley was engaged in baking, when some Indians passing at the time shot her while going from the oven to the house. On the farm of Mr. Samuel Dolsen there was an Indian settlement in the meadow near his residence, and their burying-ground was on the dry land in the vicinity. The graves were shallow: a plow passing over them would tear up their bones. At the settlement of the place the Indians had an apple-orchard, one of the trees of which is still standing, and bears a large sour apple.

Isaac Finch located 100 acres in this vicinity. Monhagan Creek ran through it, and he built the first flour- and saw-mill that were erected at the settlement. Corwin's factory is on this stream, and it enters the Wallkill below George Phillips'.

Just before the Revolution, about 1773, Gilbert Walsworth located a tract of land at Grahamsville when there was not a log house from Shawangunk Mountain to Dolsentown. Abraham Harden, Richard Jones, and Henry Devoe were also early settlers. Harden married a Dolsen. The Grahams, from whom the place takes its name, came in afterwards. The family is Irish, and the individuals of the name residing there industrious men and capital farmers.

Stephen W. Fullerton was the son of William Fullerton and Mary Whittaker. The father of William was also William, who was the first settler of the name in the town. He came from Dublin, Ireland, and died in 1786. He married Sarah Cooley, and their children were William, born March 3, 1765;

Daniel, born March 21, 1767; Samuel, born June 2, 1769; Phineas, born July 5, 1771; Sarah, born April 11, 1773; Jane, born Dec. 23, 1775.

William Fullerton, Jr., died Feb. 21, 1817, aged fifty-one years. His children were William, Daniel, Stephen W., and Elizabeth. Stephen W. Fullerton married Esther Stephens, daughter of Holloway Stephens. Their children were Daniel, Elizabeth, William, Mary, Holloway S., Stephen W., Peter P., Benjamin S., John H., Elsay T., Esther I., and Francis E. William and Stephen W. are lawyers in New York.

Mary Whittaker, the wife of William Fullerton, Jr., as previously remarked, was born April 20, 1766, and died about 1844 at an advanced age. She was the daughter of Benjamin Whittaker, who lived on the farm subsequently owned by Roswell Mead, Esq. He removed to Susquehanna two or three years before Wyoming was taken by the Indians in 1778. At that time Mary was about twelve years old. Before the attack, the settlers went into the fort which had been erected there. The occupants could not hold it against the assault, and agreed to surrender under the promise of being protected and saved. No sooner had the Indians entered than they commenced a general massacre, and very few escaped. Mary and her father were in the fort, and both were saved. Brant took her by the hair of the head and held her up by one hand and painted her face with red paint with the other, and then let her go, telling her "that was the mark of safety." When the fort was surrendered the Indians flocked in, the settlers laid down their arms, and the women and children fled and huddled themselves into one corner in expectation of instant death. John Finch, a little boy, the son of John Finch, of stouter heart than some others, laughed at the odd and grotesque appearance of the Indians, and one raised his tomahawk to strike him down. Brant saw the motion of the Indian, seized and ordered him not to injure the boy. Mr. Whittaker returned back to Minisink, and settled on the farm afterwards owned by Abraham Bennett, but after peace was established removed and located at the Cookhouse, on the Delaware. Mary in the mean time married Mr. Fullerton and remained in the town.

It would seem that some escaped the Indian massacre at Wyoming to encounter the same danger from the same quarter at Minisink the ensuing year. When the Indians invaded Minisink in 1779 under Brant they scoured the settlement, destroyed all the property of a movable character, burnt the houses, and murdered all who came in their way. Among others they visited the premises of Mr. Whittaker, and the inmates fled elsewhere for safety. Mary hid herself in an old potato-hole in which there was some straw covered with boards. The Indians searching around came and stood on the boards and so near her that she could have touched their feet with her hand, but they did not suspect her or any one to be hid there.

and she escaped. Mary at all times in after-life entertained the most cordial hatred for the Indians, and could not, down to her death, converse about them without being greatly excited. She had seen what they achieved at Wyoming and Minisink, and the horrid spectacles were deeply engraven upon her young and sensitive mind, so that no lapse of time could efface them.

Benjamin Dunning came to Ridgebury in 1809 from Wallkill, where he was born. He is the son of John Dunning, and the grandson of Jacob, one of the first settlers in the town of Goshen, in west division. The family is English. Early settlers at and near this locality were Benjamin Howell, James Hulse, John Dunken, Benjamin Smith, Isaac Decker, Jonathan Bailey, Richard Hulse, John Hallock, Sr., Nathaniel Bailey, Israel Hallock, Moses Overton, Noyes Wickham, Richard Ellison, and Charles Durling. John Dunken was killed at the battle of Minisink.

William Stickney was the earliest known ancestor of the family in this country. He settled at Rowley, Mass., about 1639.

One of the name held a colonel's commission in the army of the Revolution, and was at the battle of Bennington, under Gen. Stark.

A descendant, Eliphalet Stickney (son of Dr. James Stickney, of Newburgh), was an early resident of Wawayanda. He married a daughter of John Howell, Sr. They had eight children,—Erastus, Charles, John, Benjamin, William, Julia, Harriet, and Charlotte. Erastus married a daughter of Prentice Allyn, of Sullivan County. He served in various civil offices in the town of Minisink before its division, and was a member of the Assembly of 1857. He resides at Slate Hill. One brother, B. M. Stickney, resides in Sodus, Wayne Co., N. Y.

Charles E. Stickney, of Slate Hill, author of a history of the Minisink region, is a son of Erastus. To him we are indebted for many valuable suggestions in the preparation of the chapters upon several of the towns of the county, and considerable material has been drawn from his interesting work.

Daniel Dunning was living near Ridgebury about 1790,—a descendant, it is presumed, of Benjamin Dunning. Richard Ellison lived on the place now owned by William D. Hunt.

Roswell Mead removed to this town from New England. He purchased the Festus A. Webb farm, of which Richard Wood had been an earlier owner. Mr. Mead married a daughter of Reuben Cash, and left six children. He held the office of supervisor and various other town offices in the old town of Minisink, and was a member of the New York Legislature in 1842.

Two sons are well-known citizens of later times,—William H. and Reuben C.

Charles Durland emigrated to this town some time previous to 1800. He first settled near Bushville, in the present town of Greenville, when the whole vicinity was a dense forest, and the only road from there to Ridgebury was a narrow path among the brush. He removed to near Ridgebury, and for a time kept a public-house on the premises owned in late years by Gilbert H. Budd. In 1800 he resided on the farm that descended to his son, Thomas T. Durland. Other sons were Daniel Durland and Stewart T. Durland, of Greenville, and Addison Durland, of Minisink.

Phineas Howell came from Suffolk Co., L. I., and settled at Brookfield in 1778. He died in 1814, and was buried in the old Baptist graveyard adjoining his farm.

Richard Wood having settled in the neighborhood about the same time, both built saw-mills upon the stream from which the village takes its name.

Peter Holbert, Sr., is mentioned as a prominent citizen in early records. He was a member of the New York Legislature in 1812. His son, Peter Holbert, Jr., married a daughter of William Robertson.

Jonathan Bailey, who was born June 28, 1745, at Southold, L. I., came to Orange County during the Revolutionary war. He had been a soldier during the earlier years of the war. He was with Gen. Washington at the battle of Long Island, retreated with him across the river, and was probably at the battle of White Plains.

When his time was out he came to Goshen and settled there temporarily. The deed to the farm which he bought at Ridgebury bears date March 4, 1777. It was undoubtedly about that date that he settled there. His wife was Keturah Dunning, a widow. Her maiden name is supposed to have been Jackson. The old homestead has remained in the family from that time to the present, and is now the residence of Benjamin F. Bailey, a grandson of the pioneer. It is a beautiful situation, overlooking a wide extent of cultivated fields, hill-slopes and valleys, with the village of Middletown in the distance,—a far different view from that which met the pioneer when he first settled here, and when there was only one house on the road between Denton and Ridgebury.

The children of Jonathan Bailey were an only son, Jonathan Bailey, Jr., born Aug. 29, 1784, and three daughters,—Mrs. Braddock Decker, Mrs. Samuel Parrott, and Mrs. Nathan Parrott.

Jonathan Bailey, Jr., was a man of prominence, a major in the militia during the war of 1812-15, stationed for a time under Gen. Belknap, of Newburgh, at Harlem Heights, and one of the committee who gathered up the remains upon the battle-field of Minisink and brought them to Goshen for interment. The children of Jonathan Bailey, Jr., were Benjamin F. Bailey, now residing upon the old homestead, and three daughters,—Mrs. Gilbert F. Monden, Mrs. Richard A. Elmer, and Mrs. James T. W. Coulter.

Jonathan Bailey, the pioneer, had one brother, Nathaniel, who also came to Orange County about the same time, and also settled in what is now Wawa-yanda. His homestead was the place now owned by Nathaniel Bailey. Among his children, well known to the elder citizens of this neighborhood, were Nathaniel, Benjamin, Columbus, Barcas, and Wickham W.

Benjamin F. Bailey had excellent opportunities of knowing the particulars of the battle of Minisink. His father was thirty years of age at the death of the grandfather (Feb. 17, 1814), and of course had heard the matter repeatedly talked over. Benjamin F. Bailey himself was born March 15, 1814, and remembers clearly the family traditions of his boyhood.

Samuel Tooker was an early surveyor in this section of country. He married a daughter of James Finch, Sr., of Mount Hope. He died in 1811. His son, Charles Tooker, settled near Brookfield, and left two sons, James H. Tooker and Samuel S. Tooker. A daughter of Samuel Tooker married James F. Vail. Mr. Tooker was not only a surveyor, but a teacher, and taught for several years in New Windsor, Goshen, and elsewhere. His homestead in Wawayanda was the present McBride place, upon which he located about 1790.

Samuel Reed, Sr., was in the town at an early date. His widow lived to an advanced age, dying about 1867. She distinctly remembered seeing the people go to the Minisink battle in 1779. Three of her neighbors met under an apple-tree for that purpose, and though very small she recalled the parting scene very plainly. Two of the three perished in the battle.

Joshua Davis, Sr., was an early settler, having located some time previous to 1775 on the farm owned in later years by Col. William C. Carpenter, about a mile and a half south of Brookfield. The stone dwelling-house on this place was built about 1787. Mr. Davis was the driver of the first vehicle on wheels that ever passed over the road from Goshen through Ridgebury. This was a rude two-wheeled ox-cart, and was no doubt considered a great innovation by the few settlers in these parts, the road then being a mere path. He left four daughters and two sons, Joshua and James. One of the daughters married Richard Ferguson, whose father was an early settler of this section, and built the mills at Gardnerville subsequently owned by C. W. Fowler. The old homestead with its venerable stone house is now owned by James Smith. The mason-work upon the house was done by Charles Durland, father of Thos. T. Durland of the present time.

Noyes Wickham was an early settler near Ridgebury, at least he was residing there in 1800. He was probably connected to the Wickham families farther east in this county.

Reuben Cash was an early pioneer in this section, and frequently mentioned in the old annals. He was a survivor of the Wyoming massacre of 1778. He escaped with his mother, she leading him by the hand through the wilderness to Minisink. He married a daughter of John Howell, Sr., and had nine children. One of his daughters married Roswell Mead; another, Samuel Vail, Sr.; a third, John E. S. Gardner; a fourth, Parmenas Horton. The old homestead descended to the son, Meritt H. Cash. He was a noted physician, and held many civil offices in the old town of Minisink. (Ante, p. 170.)

Samuel Reed located near Slate Hill, on the place owned by his grandson, about 1790. He had three sons,—Silas, Lewis, Alfred.

Peter Holbert came into this section soon after the Revolution, and settled where his grandson now lives.

John Howell must have moved to this town about 1778. He had been an old sailor, had been on one or two whaling-voyages to the Arctic regions, besides numerous trips to other shores before the mast of a merchantman. He also served as a soldier in the Continental army during the war of the Revolution. He was in the battle of Minisink, and one of the few who escaped to tell the story. Before coming to this town he had resided at Sugar-Loaf. He died about 1790, and was buried at the Corners, about two miles below Ridgebury. One of his daughters married Reuben Cash, another John Roberts, another Eliphalet Stickney, and one, Hephzibah, remained unmarried. The old homestead descended to two sons,—John Howell and Jeffrey Howell.

Benjamin Howell was also an early settler at Ridgebury. Indeed, one of the Howells is said to have been the actual first settler of the place.* He was a Revolutionary soldier, and is understood by his descendants to have been living at Ridgebury before the war. He had a brother, Ezra, of Blooming-Grove, who was also a Revolutionary soldier, and noted for having refused to receive a pension from the government.

The children of Benjamin Howell were James, who removed to Steuben County; George W., who settled in Goshen village; John, who also located at Goshen, and was the father of John Edward Howell; Daniel, who removed to New York City; Preston, who went to Iowa; Chauncey, who removed to Erie, Pa.; Henry, who settled in Illinois; and Benjamin, who removed to New York City.

Elijah Canfield was in Wawayanda as early as 1793, and probably some years before. His homestead was the place now owned by Fowler Smith.

James Stewart was an early settler at the present Thompson place. His children were Silas, Luther, John, William (shot at Peenpack by the Indians), Mrs. Nathan Arnout, and Mrs. Wm. Stewart. Lewis Stewart, now of Ridgebury, is a son of John.

Jonathan Cooley lived in Dolsentown. His homestead was the present place of Oliver Carpenter.

John Bradner, the first supervisor of Minisink, lived at Dolsentown on the well-known Stoddard place of later years. He settled subsequently to the year 1775, and at some period before the organization of the town in 1789.

* The settlement of Richard Halstead being shown in the chapter upon Goshen to have been made in Wawayanda, 1748, it is not probable either of the Howells antedate that.

James Reeve, of Long Island, was among the early settlers. His wife was Mary, the daughter of David Moore, whose great-grandfather came from England in 1635 and settled at Salem, Mass. (1) James Reeve and wife had four children,—James, Jr., Hephzibah, Polly, and one who died young. James Reeve, Jr., was wounded in the battle of Minisink. On the 22d of July, 1778, he settled upon land near Slate Hill, where his grandson, the Hon. John H. Reeve, now resides. Hephzibah married Jonas Hulse, and Polly married Elijah Canfield. In 1770, James Reeve, Sr., was married the second time. His wife was Mary Corwin, by whom he had fourteen children, viz.: David, Daniel, Joshua, Lydia, Annie, Keturah, Deborah, Isaac, Sarah, Mary, Amutal, Jerusha, Elijah, Dorothy, and Julia. The last named is the only one living, being about eighty-five years of age, and resides at Bloomingburgh, Sullivan Co., N. Y., in the same building in which she commenced housekeeping more than sixty years ago.

The above-named eighteen children of James Reeve, Sr., all lived to mature years except one. Elijah died a young man, and Sarah never married. The others have left descendants by the names of Hulse, Canfield, Shultz, McVish, Ludlum, Drake, Carpenter, Mapes, Crawford, and Reeve, who now reside in this vicinity, and many others residing elsewhere. There are living at this time (December, 1880) within one hour's ride of Middletown five generations as descendants of James Reeve, Sr., viz.: Julia, his daughter; grandchildren by the name of Reeve, Hulse, McVish, and others; great-grandchildren by the name of Shaw, Hulse, Mapes, etc.; great-great-grandchildren by the name of Mapes; great-great-great-grandchildren by the name of McBride and Beakes.

The original homestead of (1) James Reeve, purchased in 1768, still remains in the family, being now occupied by his grandson, Wickham C. Reeve, one of the sons of Isaac. This land originally cost James Reeve, Sr., about $1.25 per acre. It is now valued with its improvements at about $100 per acre.

O. P. Reeve, of Middletown, is a grandson of James Reeve, Sr., and son of David, the first of the second family of fourteen.

Joseph Halsted located very early at Slate Hill. (See Goshen.)

John Knapp, a settler about the time of the Revolution, probably lived on the present place of David Slauson.

Christian Schultz had early mills at Dolsentown.

Phineas Howell settled soon after the Revolution, and probably on the present place of Thomas Durland. He had three sons,—Jason, James, and David.

Timothy Wood located on property now owned by Holbert & Robinson. His sons were Jonas, Timothy, Garret, Thomas, Tillet. The old homestead was near Slate Hill.

Benjamin Smith settled very early where Silas Hulse now lives. He made potash, and the building stood below the hill. A store was also kept there soon after the Revolution, about a mile east of Slate Hill. The date of Benjamin Smith's cattle-mark is 1769. (See Minisink.)

Isaac Decker lived in the same neighborhood, and the property is still in the hands of his descendants.

Daniel Fullerton kept an early tavern on the present place of Daniel H. Eaton. The old Fullerton residence was near the present tenant-house of Mr. Eaton.

William Burns, an early settler of 1780, or about that date, lived on the farm now owned by Charles E. Stickney, near Slate Hill, having a tenant residing upon it.

Asa Stewart settled soon after the Revolution where John L. Cummings now resides. It is remembered as a sad incident of early times that Mr. Stewart's only son died suddenly while the house was being built, having taken cold by lying upon the ground.

The Isaac Dolsen homestead, where stood the old house with loop-holes for defense in 1756, was the present John Bradley place.

To the old homestead James, one of the two sons mentioned, succeeded. He had three sons,—Asa, Samuel, James. The last named came into possession of the same homestead. From him it passed to his son Frederick, then to Theophilus, son of Frederick, who sold it to the Bradleys.

As Samuel and Asa are often mentioned in the early town records, we identify their homesteads as follows,—Asa lived on the present Redfield place, near the earlier farm of his grandfather; Samuel, on the well-known farm now the Judge Low property, and occupied by Mr. Green. It was on this farm that tradition locates the Indian graveyard, as already mentioned, and where Owens was killed by the Indians. This last event occurred on the low land southeast from the dwelling-house and near a barn now standing there. The frame of this barn is said to be very old, dating back to the early settlement.

The early Isaac Dolsen house was a stone building, and stood about on the site of the present dwelling of Mr. Bradley. The block-house or fort is said to have stood on the present garden near. A stone in the present wall of the dwelling-house is marked 1760, and is said to have been taken from the fort of 1756. It very probably indicates, however, the date when Isaac Dolsen built his stone house, having lived for some years in a log house. Isaac Dolsen must have been already in middle life when he penetrated this wilderness and established himself in this beautiful location. His son James was in the Revolutionary army at West Point. Being taken sick, his own son James was old enough to take his father's place. The father died of the sickness. The barn mentioned above near where Owens was killed is also noted as a place of the earliest meetings, long before any house of worship was erected in that section of country.

The Dolsen family are now all gone from this immediate locality. Mrs. Emmet Moore, of Middletown, is a daughter of Samuel Dolsen. Other descendants reside at Howell's Station. The neighborhood in its present beauty and richness of soil amply justifies the choice originally made by Isaac Dolsen.

The Dolsen name was originally Van Dolsen, and it is a tradition in the family that the first child born on Manhattan Island was a Van Dolsen. The original Dolsen tract comprised 700 acres. It was purchased in 1735 at one dollar per acre. Betty, one of the slaves of the early period, lived down to within a few years, and could tell many stories of the Dolsen family and neighborhood.

Richard Wood, born in Goshen, settled about the opening of the Revolution, 1773 to 1775, on the farm now owned by William Wood near Slate Hill. His sons were Henry, Aaron C., Oliver E., Lewis C., and Horace B. Oliver and Horace are still living, the latter in Erie Co., N. Y., Oliver at Slate Hill, and to him we are indebted for many of these items.

Samuel Benjamin also located at Ridgebury.

Richard Wood, another early settler, located just after the Revolution at Brookfield, on the place now owned by William H. Wood. Meetings were held at his house before the erection of the Baptist meeting-house, which was built in 1792. His children were Harry, Aaron C., Oliver (now living at Slate Hill), Lewis C., Horace, Mrs. William Greening, Mrs. Henry Durland, and Mrs. Robert Hunt.

Asa Dolsen's homestead was the present James Murray place, at Dolsentown.

Daniel Ward is mentioned in the early town records of Minisink. His place is in the present neighborhood of Daniel H. Eaton.

Freegift Cooley, who held frequent town offices before 1800, lived at Millsburgh.

John Short was an early settler at Millsburgh. He had one son, known as Si Short. A daughter became the wife of John Eaton.

To show what families were residing in Wawayanda at a later date, 1813, we have the records of the school districts as formed that year in accordance with the new law of 1812. They are found in the first volume of Minisink records, and are described, fortunately for historical purposes, by naming the families included in each. In some cases the formation of the new towns of course intersected the districts, and in giving entire districts in Wawayanda they may include a few who, in 1813, lived beyond the line of the present town. The citizens of the present time will easily understand this, and from so valuable a record will no doubt be able to locate all these families of 1813.

District No. 1 comprised the following families, viz.:

those of Thomas Gale, John Gale and one tenant, George Phillips and two tenants, Robert Boak, Henry W. Denton and one tenant, Gale & Phillips and two tenants, James Eldred and one tenant, James Coyles, David Mills, Martha Cavanagh and sons, Widow Wilson and sons, James Little and one tenant, Deborah Case and one tenant, Nicholas Van Tassel, David Lathrop's tenant, Theodore Dolsen and one tenant, John Brainer's two tenants, Abraham Canfield, James Dolsen, Jr., Asa Dolsen, Nathan Arnout, Benjamin Wood and one tenant, Nathaniel Bailey (3). This district was in the northeast part of the town, and shows the families of 1813 who resided in that section.

District No. 2 comprised the following names: William Murray and one tenant, Isaac Reeves, Nathan Hulse, William Little, Silas Hulse, Wilmot Moore, Christian Schultz, Samuel Dolsen and one tenant, Benjamin Wood and two tenants, James Dolsen, Frederick Dolsen, John Bradner, David Lathrop's mother, Archibald Little, Nathaniel Cooley, Henry Stewart, David Anderson, Isaac Carpenter and one tenant. This was the Dolsentown District, along the north part of the town.

District No. 3 was composed of the following families, as formed in 1813, viz.: those of Asa Stewart, Daniel Fullerton and two tenants, David Moore, Jr., Daniel Cooley, Samuel Reed, Michael Halstead, Jr., Braddock Decker, William Fullerton, Widow Tucker, Homes Ketcham, Thomas Sigler, Michael Halstead, Benjamin Smith, Jr., John Moore, Elijah Canfield, Joseph Ellis, Joseph Smith, Jason Howell, James Howell, Widow William Halstead, Isaac L. Peck, James Denn, Moses Vail, James Higby, George McNish, Abner Cary, Richard Wood, Joseph Reed, William Burns, William Peppard, James Allison. This was in part the territory of the present Mead District, northeast of Slate Hill.

District No. 4, as formed in 1813, comprised the following families, viz.: those of David Seely, Moses Delany and one tenant, Nathaniel Bailey, Nathan Arnout, Jr., Rachel and James Van Seoy, James Thompson, Richard Hulse, Daniel Dunning, Abner Miller, Jonathan Bailey, Jr., Barcus Bailey, Columbia Bailey, Benjamin Howell, Jacob Dunning, Isaac Decker, Morris Overton, Nancy Overton, Thomas Brown, Benjamin Dunning, John Hallock, John Hallock, Jr., Elisha Hallock, Israel Hallock, Horace Elmer, John T. Jansen, Jr., James Howell, William Peppard, Jr., Charles Durland, James Canfield, Elijah Wells, Elijah Wells, Jr., Jonathan Bailey, Israel W. Bailey, Noyes Wickham, Barnabas Wickham, Phileas Finch. This is the Ridgebury District.

District No. 5 comprised the following families, viz.: those of Obadiah Pellet, heirs of Wm. Pellet, Widow Mary Pellet, Daniel Payne, James Wood, Increase Carpenter, Daniel Sloan, Daniel Wickham and one tenant, Joseph Brown, Joseph Brown, Jr., Widow Julia Ferguson, Widow Ann Allison, Samuel Hazen, Sarah Grinder, Jesse Parshall, Daniel Mapes, John Carr, Joseph Smith, Horace Elmer, George Jackson, James Van Bumel. This was the territory known as the Lower Road District. The name of Pellet's Bridge arose from this family name, several of whom were included in the district as above noticed.

For the Wawayanda portion of the old Gardnerville District, as formed in 1813, see town of Minisink, where the district is given in full.

District No. 8, as organized in 1813, included the following families, viz.: those of Peter Holbert, Timothy Wood, Samuel Holbert, James Reeve and son, John Lane, Jacob Hulse, David Robertson, Robert Robertson, William Robertson, Amy Abbott, Asa Cobb, Samuel Hoyt, Daniel St. John, Jeremiah Oakley, James Mulford, Martin L. Mapes, Uriah Hulse, Nathan Wells, Barnabas Horton, David Moore, Henry Ball, James V. Hulse, Benjamin Hulse, Joseph Brundage, James Owen, Samuel Schoonover, William Wells, Jr., Samuel Mather, Thomas Wood. This was the old Centreville District, perhaps including some names from the town of Minisink at Millsburgh.

District No. 9, as organized in 1813, comprised the following families, viz.: those of Abraham Bennett, Peter Mills, Benjamin Bennett, Samuel Carpenter, John Carpenter, Edward How, Holloway Stephens, James C. Gray, Daniel Albertson, Ebenezer Stephens, Elihu Cary, Thomas Thorn, Jacob Thorn, Richard Van Tassel, Peter Van Sickel, Moses Cox, James Rumph, Robert L. Hunter, Alexander Boyd, Noah Cobb, James Weed, Abraham Cary, Daniel Williams. This was the Slate Hill District, or near there.

For names of several Wawayanda citizens of 1813 reference should probably be made to the "Rome District," found in the chapter upon Minisink.

For some Wawayanda names it may be necessary to consult district No. 19, as given in the chapter upon Greenville, known as the Mount Orange District or as the Graham District.

District No. 23, as formed in 1813, comprised the following names: Jacob A. Tryon and three tenants, Benjamin Smith, Jr., Oliver Smith, David Moore, Daniel Fullerton, Joseph Ellis, Asa Stewart, Wm. Peppard, Apollos Jessup, Wm. McMeryon, Isaac Carpenter, Nathaniel Cooley, Jr., James Howell, Wm. Peppard, Jr., John T. Jameson, Jr., Nathan Arnout, Asa Dolsen, Absalom Cary, Daniel Williams.

District No. 26, as formed in 1813, included the following families, viz.: those of Nathan Wells, Holmes Ketcham, Jacob Thorn, Peter A. Van Sudd, Aaron Halstead, Michael Halstead, Richard Weiant, Alexander Boyd, Stephen Jones, Robert L. Hunter, Richard Van Tassel, Uriah Hulse, Martha Brundage, Jonas Rumsey, Thomas Sigler, Henry Jaquish.

Old district No. 27 seems to be entirely omitted from the records of 1813. It comprised the territory south of the Slate Hill District, and now known as the Stewarttown District. The district was formed at a later date than 1813 probably, as we find the organization of 28 given under date of 1823, while 26 closes the list as formed in 1813. Citizens acquainted with names and localities may find, on examination of the other districts given, that the territory afterwards constituting 27 was already covered by one or more of them.

An early grist-mill was the present place of the Littles' feed-mill. This was the Christian Schultz mill of old times. Another early grist-mill was at Gardnerville, where John R. Manning has a grist-mill at the present time, known for many years as the Jones' Mill. At Millspaugh was also an early grist-mill known as Skinner's. One by Michael Halstead was a mile north of Slate Hill, on the place where Augustus Sergeant now owns. This was a hundred years ago or more.

Daniel Fullerton kept a public-house for many years where Daniel H. Eaton now lives. There was a noted tavern near Denton, where Theodore Denton now lives. There were nine distilleries in town in 1832, five in the neighborhood of Slate Hill.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

The general act authorizing boards of supervisors to erect new towns was passed not long after the adoption of the constitution of 1846. The Board of Supervisors of Orange County were very soon called upon to act under the provisions of the new statute. At the town-meeting of Minisink in the spring of 1849 the following formal action was taken:

"Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, freeholders of the town of Minisink, Orange Co., will make application to the board of supervisors, at their next annual meeting, for the division of said town, to form a new town out of that part of the town comprising the first election district.

(Signed) "Jacob Harding, David Carr, P. W. Sloat, J. S. Slauson, Theophilus Dolsen, S. Stewart, Jonathan Bailey, Gabriel Little, S. F. Gardiner, R. A. Elmer, Usher H. Case, Martin L. Mapes, Isaac Denton, George W. Murray, S. Sergeant, T. B. Denton, Alfred Wood, D. T. Hulse, B. F. Bailey, Hiram Phillips."

The subject came before the board on the 27th of November following. The maps and survey of the proposed new town were made by Dr. D. C. Hallock, and the motion for a division was made by Daniel Fullerton, supervisor of Minisink. As the movement was thus favored by the official representative of the town of Minisink, who was in accord with the political majority of the board, the proposition was easily carried, though by a strictly party vote, the ten Whigs voting for, and the five Democrats against, the erection of the new town. The name adopted was Wawayanda, being that of the early patent.

To preside at the first town-meeting there were appointed by the act of incorporation David Clark, Martin L. Mapes, and Henry Decker.

FIRST TOWN MEETING.

At the first town-meeting, 1850, the following were the officers chosen: Daniel Fullerton, supervisor; Holloway W. Stephens, town clerk; Jacob D. Masterson, Gideon W. Cock, justices of the peace; Lewis W. Mullock, town superintendent of schools; James M. Reeve, John Cumings, assessors; William C. Carpenter, Nathaniel W. Talmage, commissioners of highways; Curtis McNish, collector; Usher H. Case, William Canfield, overseers of the poor; Robert S. Robbins, Curtis McNish, Daniel L. Hulse, Samuel Vail, constables; Oliver Lewis, James H. Tooker, John C. Owen, Nelson McBride, James F. Robertson, Matthew H. Bailey, inspectors of election; Henry D. Howell, town sealer; overseers of the highway were appointed for sixty-five road districts, and $200 was voted for roads and bridges.

Carpenter (same to fill vacancy); 1856, Gideon W. Cock; 1857, Jacob M. Johnson; 1858, John H. Reeve; 1859, Wm. C. Carpenter; 1860, Gideon W. Cock; 1861, Jacob M. Johnson; 1862, Jonathan R. Lutes, Elijah Smith; 1863, Wm. C. Carpenter; 1864, Gideon W. Cock; 1865 (record fails to show who was elected); 1866, John B. Case, Erastus Stickney; 1867, Wm. C. Carpenter; 1868, John D. Wood, Wm. H. Wood; 1869, Erastus Stickney, Thomas H. Norris; 1870, Charles E. Stickney (same to fill vacancy); 1871, James M. Reeve; 1872, Gabriel Howell; 1873, Henry S. Pound; 1874, Charles E. Stickney; 1875, John D. Wood; 1876, Dillon Wallace; 1877, John H. Reeve; 1878, George S. Cock; 1879, J. A. Mills, Wm. G. Stanton; 1880, Charles H. Fullerton.

HAMPTON

is a small hamlet, owing its growth to the fact that it is a railroad station on the New York, Erie and Western Railway, furnishing railroad accommodations to a portion of Wawayanda, also to portions of Goshen and Wallkill. It is only a short distance from Denton.

MILLSBURGH

is an early point of settlement, giving to it considerable importance. There is one store there at the present time, by Wm. Armstrong; Mather's blacksmith and wagon-shop; Mead's grist-mill and Drake's grist-mill, each with a saw-mill; also a cider-mill. There was an important woolen-factory here in former times, now abandoned, and the property owned by Mr. Manning.

RIDGEBURY

is an old-established place. The site of the village was owned in 1800 by Benjamin Dunning, Jonathan Bailey, Benjamin Howell, Isaac Decker, and others. It was in this vicinity that several of the earliest settlers of the town located, as John Hallock, Sr., James Hulse, Benjamin Smith, Moses Overton, Noyes Wickham, Richard Allison, and Charles Durland. The name of the village is said to arise from "Whortleberry Hill," a neighboring ridge still bearing that designation. It was first applied to the Presbyterian house of worship, which was known as the Ridgeberry church. According to this origin, the name should be Ridgeberry, but usage is determining the other form of the word. The present business of the place consists of one store, by Wm. S. Osburn; a blacksmith-shop, by Samuel Latimer; a wagon-shop, by George Newton; steam-mills, cider, grist, and feed, by H. P. Hall. Two physicians are located here, Dr. Terry and Dr. Webb, homœopathic. Frank Ellis is the present postmaster of Ridgebury.

CENTREVILLE

is near Millsburgh, on the same outlet. (See Minisink.) The two places together constitute what is called Wells' Corners. The post-office for this section of the town is at Centreville. The present business comprises a store, by James Conner, and one by George W. Murray; blacksmith-shops, by Martin Bennett and by Gilbert E. Robbins; a distillery, by J. & P. Cummings.

GARDNERVILLE

has one store, by J. M. Everett; a grist-mill, by John R. Manning; a wagon- and blacksmith-shop, by Charles Gardner.

BROOKFIELD

is undoubtedly named from its proximity to a brook, which, in fact, nearly surrounds it. It was settled at an early date, and before the construction of the Erie Railway was a place of considerable notoriety, having a printing-office, grist-mill, plaster-mill, saw-mill, tanning, etc. It is better known at the present time as Slate Hill, the post-office and the station upon the railroad both bearing that designation. The present business places comprise the railroad buildings; the shoe-shop and saloon of W. H. Green; W. A. Castle, flour and feed; William Breeme, blacksmith; and the store of Charles E. Stickney, general merchandise.

WAWAYANDA

is a milk-station on the New Jersey Midland Railroad, just north of Rutger's Creek, the boundary line of Minisink.

DENTON.

This place, originally known as "The Outlet," takes its name from the Dentons,—Thaddeus B. and Henry W., descendants of Richard Denton, mentioned elsewhere. Elisha Eldridge, from New England, built a store and tavern there about the time of the Revolution. Earlier than that it had been owned by Richard Carpenter. In later years the property has been owned by Theodore J. Denton and Reuben C. Mead.

At the present time Harrison's store and one or more shops constitute about all the business of the village. The growth of Hampton, upon the Erie Railroad, a short distance away, has naturally tended to draw business to that point. John Straight has a blacksmith-shop, and D. Probest a wagon-shop.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

At the organization of the town the system of supervision by town superintendents prevailed, and the incumbents of that office until the repeal of the law in 1856 were the following: 1849, Lewis W. Mulock; 1851, Lewis H. Tyler; 1853, Gideon W. Cock, Jr.; 1855, Moses D. Stivers.

There are now ten school districts in town, and they are carefully recorded in the minutes of 1875, with the names of all the heads of families in each district, forming an invaluable record for the future historians of another century, to show the names and locations of the people of to-day.

Early teachers in Wawayanda are mentioned by Oliver Wood as Dr. Harvey Horton, John Hick, Samuel Tooker, Mr. Clark, Stephen W. Fullerton, Aldridge Wood, Erastus Stickney, and Horatio Bates. Oliver Wood himself also taught.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH OF BROOKFIELD, in the town of Minisink, executed a certificate of incorporation pursuant to statute at a meeting held at the house of Lebbeus Lathrop, Dec. 15, 1791. The paper was signed by Isaac Finch and John Fenton. The trustees named therein were Isaac Finch, John Fenton, and Benjamin Smith. Further particulars are furnished by Mr. C. D. Wood, clerk of the church.

The Brookfield Church, once a branch of the Warwick Baptist Church, was constituted Aug. 28, 1783. How many members, or who they were at the time the church was constituted, cannot be ascertained, as those facts were not recorded. In the old record it is mentioned that an application was made to the Warwick Church in July, 1783, by the members living west of the Wallkill to be set apart in a body by themselves; and in August following the church sent their pastor, Elder William Benedict, and the brethren Deacon Silsbee and Enos Silsbee, who made some inquiry, baptized seven candidates, and constituted the church. On the following day they ordained one of their brethren, by the name of Clark, to preach.

Among the early members we find the following names, which undoubtedly were of the original number: Lebbeus Lathrop, James Finch, John Hallock, Asa Cobb, William Fullerton, James Clark, Betsey Clark, John Finton, Elizabeth Finton, Elizabeth Prouty, Stephen Prouty, Mehetable Hallock, Mary Howell, Amy Cooley, Daniel Cash, William Kirby, Mary Kirby.

The first deacons of the church were Isaac Finch and Asa Cobb, ordained Feb. 23, 1785. The first regular pastor ordained by the church was Elder Lebbeus Lathrop, on the second Thursday in February, 1785.

For about nine years after the church was constituted they held their meetings at the houses of various members, or in summer-time they met in barns or in groves. At that period the country was but little more than a wilderness. The inhabitants were without the means to build a house of worship. But as they increased in numbers and became more able they decided to erect a meeting-house, and accordingly procured a piece of land of Deacon John Hallock, in the village of Brookfield, in December, 1791. The following year, 1792, the meeting-house was built. In 1828 the steeple was added, and the house painted and reroofed.

At this period in the history of the church it was in a prosperous condition. But four or five years after, the division took place in the Baptist denomination, and the Brookfield Church went with the Old-School or Primitive order. After that time the church decreased for many years, but afterwards was more prosperous again. The meeting-house is a plain building, built for service, as time has told for near a century. It will accommodate about 500 people. Constructed on the old English plan, with family pews on the sides and slips in the centre of the building. The pulpit represents the candlestick of olden time.

In 1876 the church and congregation raised money to repair the meeting-house, and chose the late Edmund B. Murray, of Goshen, and Charles D. Wood a building committee, who conducted the work without altering the original plan. On the 28th and 29th August, 1877, the house was rededicated for public worship, since which time the church has been supplied by Elder William L. Benedict, who preaches for it. The church owns about an acre of land, on which the meeting-house stands, in the village of Brookfield.

The pastors have been as follows: Lebbeus Lathrop, 1789-97; John Caton, 1797-1808; Henry Ball, 1808-32; Gabriel Conklin, 1832-47; Benjamin Pitcher, 1847-49; Daniel Harding, 1849-51; — Slater, 1851-67; W. L. Benedict, 1867. The intervening time when the church had no pastor it had to depend on supplies for the preaching of the word. The present officers (1880) are John B. Carey, C. D. Wood, John W. Ellis, trustees; C. D. Wood, clerk.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AT RIDGEBURY, WEST SIDE OF THE WALLKILL, effected a legal organization at the house of Jonathan Bailey, Nov. 27, 1805. The paper was signed by Jonathan Bailey and James Reeve, inspectors of the election, and the trustees named therein were Elijah Wells, Jonathan Bailey, James Reeve, Nathan Arnout, Nathaniel Bailey, Luther Steward, Samuel Tooker.

This church* has two organizations in its past: the first in 1792, and the second a reorganization in 1817. Its form of government under the first organization was a commingling of the Presbyterian and the Congregational; the reorganization was strictly Presbyterian. The record of the original organization is carefully preserved, and is as follows:

"An account of the proceedings of the church of Ridgebury, 1792.

"July 10, 1792. At a meeting held this day at the house of Richard Benjamin by the Christian professors of this place for the purpose of constituting a church,—present, Mr. Benoni Bradner and Mr. Isaac Sergeant, ministers, who were called to attend and to assist in this matter. Mr. Bradner was chosen moderator. Opened with prayer. Deacon Richard Clark and wife, Richard Benjamin and wife, Widow Hannah Benjamin, Mrs. Eunice Knapp, wife of John Knapp, members of Midletown Church; Capt. John Bailey and Nathaniel Bailey, of Goshen Church; and Elizabeth Reeve, wife of James Reeve, Jr., member of a church in Southold, Long Island, agreed unanimously to form a church."

To these nine others were added on examination, making its membership at its founding 18. Mr. Benoni Bradner was then pastor of the Goshen Presbyterian Church. Mr. Isaac Sergeant was the first minister of this church, his ministry there beginning with its beginning.

The reorganization, July 5, 1817, is recorded in the following manner:

"At a meeting of the Congregational Church of Ridgeberry, held July 5, 1817, the following resolutions were passed:

"1st. Resolved, That we adopt the Confession of Faith and the form of government of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America.

"2d. That we put ourselves under the care and connect ourselves with the Presbytery of Hudson."

In accordance with this action, the church convened at the meeting-house, July 19, 1817, and chose as ruling elders Benjamin Howell, Jonathan Bailey, and Benjamin Dunning, who were ordained, Aug. 31, 1817, by Rev. William Blain. The church was received under the care of Hudson Presbytery in September, 1817, and on Sept. 20, 1817, Rev. William Blain was installed its pastor. Its ministry has been as follows: 1792, Mr. Isaac Sergeant; 1804-6, Rev. Mr. Bull; 1807-14, Rev. Allan Blain; 1817, Rev. William Blain; 1823-33, Rev. William Timlow, who preached alternate Sabbaths at Ridgebury and Amity; 1833-37, Rev. Sylvester Sweezy, whose pastorate was terminated by his death, March 5, 1837, at the age of thirty-four; preaching every Sabbath began with him; 1838-48, Rev. William Y. Miller; one in place of the two consecutive sermons began under him; 1849, first six months, Rev. Mr. Kinmon was stated supply; 1849-51, Rev. Augustus Seward was stated supply; 1851-63, Rev. Clifford S. Arms, the largest pastorate in the history of the church, and was ended by his death; 1863-69, Rev. Nathaniel E. Pierson; 1869-70, Rev. J. R. Campbell; 1872-73, Rev. Charles H. Park; 1873-75, Rev. Brown H. Emerson, stated supply; 1875-80, Rev. Theron Brittain, stated supply, which relation continues at this date, November, 1880.

The deacons of the period before the reorganization of 1817 were Richard Clark, Johathan Bailey, chosen 1792; Elijah Wells, James Reeve, chosen 1804. The eldership has been as follows: Benjamin Howell, chosen at the reorganization; Jonathan Bailey, chosen 1817; Benjamin Dunning, James Reeve, Elijah Wells, Joseph Decker, Apollos Jessup, chosen 1822; Alexander Boyd, Roswell Mead, chosen 1826; Jesse C. Stewart, James Von Bomel, chosen 1836; Lewis Stewart, J. Mortimer Reeve, Henry Decker, chosen 1845; B. F. Bailey, H. G. Wickham, G. W. Cock, chosen 1864. Of these, but four are now living. One of them, J. Mortimer Reeve, has moved from the bounds of the congregation; and Lewis Stewart, B. F. Bailey, and G. W. Cock constitute the present eldership.

The trustees at this date (1880) are Lewis Stewart, Hon. John H. Reeve, Jonas Hawkins, Gideon W. Cock, Jonathan Decker, A. J. Harrison, William W. Wickham. During the period preceding the reorganization 92 were enrolled. Of these, about 50 survived in 1817 and passed into the reorganized church. From the date of reorganization, 1817, to the present (1880) 554 members have been enrolled. The present membership numbers 100.

The first edifice was first preached in Sept. 19, 1806. The church building of the present was dedicated New Year's day, Jan. 1, 1842, Rev. George Pierson, of Florida, preaching the sermon. Its original cost was about $5000. The interior was remodeled in 1877, at an expenditure of about $1000, and at this time it continues to be a neat and comfortable house of worship. Attached is a parsonage with ample grounds. The whole property is free from debt.

CENTREVILLE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

executed a certificate of incorporation at the meeting-house April 5, 1827. The proceedings were signed by Martin L. Mapes, moderator, and the trustees named in the instrument were Peter Holbert, Dorastus Brown, William Robertson, Martin L. Mapes, James Mulford, John Rune, Silas C. Brown. Additional particulars are furnished by a committee of the church, as follows:

The church was organized April 30, 1829, by a committee of the Presbytery of Hudson, consisting of Rev. William Timlow, Rev. Ezra Fisk, D.D., and the Rev. Daniel Crane, Mr. Timlow preaching the sermon, Ps. xlv. 1-4.

The persons who were constituted this church were members of the Western Presbyterian Church, and were set off for this purpose by Presbytery at its spring meeting in April, 1829, and their names are as follows: David Osmun, Martin L. Mapes, Dorastus Brown, Lydia Osmun, Nelly Mapes, Esther Brown, William Robertson, Keziah Robertson, Mary

* By the pastor, Rev. Theron Brittain.

Robertson, Sarah Wells, Sarah Ann Canfield, Mary Brundage, Hila Goldsmith, Peter Corwin, David Carr, Azubah Carr, Benjamin Halstead, Anna Halstead, Deborah Halstead, Jemima Corwin, Julia Armstrong, Wilmot Armstrong, John Little, Elizabeth Little, Silas C. Brown, Mary Brown.

The church edifice was begun and mostly finished in 1828 (before the organization), and was dedicated in April, 1829. In size it is 40 feet by 50 feet, and it cost about $3000. It will seat 500 persons. It is the same in capacity at present as at the beginning, and has never been much repaired. It is a very strong and substantial building. The parsonage was built about thirty-five years ago, and cost $1000, together with free work by the congregation. It has been repaired from time to time, and is at present a commodious and pleasant house.

The pastors and stated supplies have been Rev. Thomas Grier, Nov. 26, 1829, to Sept. 29, 1832, supply; Rev. Thomas Holliday, 1833-35, supply; Rev. William Townley, 1835-37, pastor; Rev. Thomas Holliday again supplied the church for a few months in the latter half of the year 1837; Rev. Benjamin Van Keuren, 1837-45, pastor; various supplies from 1845 to 1848, furnished mostly by Presbytery; Rev. Thaddeus Wilson, 1848-52, pastor; Rev. Oscar Harris, 1854-63, pastor; Rev. Holloway W. Hunt, 1865-70, supply; Rev. William A. Wescott, 1871, died February, 1876, pastor; Rev. Charles W. Cooper commenced his labors May, 1877, and is still serving.

Elders: 1829, David Osmun, Martin L. Mapes, Dorastus Brown; 1831, Isaac Bodle, Israel Y. Corwin, Silas C. Brown; 1832, Peter Holbert, Sr.; 1838, William Graham; 1843, William W. Robertson, Peter Holbert, Jr.; 1850, James Johnson, Linden Mulford, John Robertson; 1872, Daniel C. Brown, John R. Tryon, Benjamin Hull. Deacons: 1843, John H. Robertson, Linden Mulford.

The church was dedicated April 19, 1829; the sermon was preached by the Rev. Ezra Fisk, D.D. C. W. Cooper, John R. Tryon, and Linden Mulford were appointed a committee to prepare this notice.

The church has always sustained a Sabbath-school. At present the one held in the church has about 80 scholars. There is one district Sabbath-school, with a membership of 25. The pastor preaches at an out-station once a month.

The ladies have an organization for general church work; also an organization for missionary work.

The present organization is as follows: Rev. Charles W. Cooper, minister; Peter Holbert, Linden Mulford, Benjamin Hull, John R. Tryon, elders; Linden Mulford, deacon. Present number of communicants is 84. The trustees are Martin L. Robertson, Floyd F. Tryon, William L. Brown, James Edson Campbell.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF DENTON made a legal organization March 26, 1839. The proceedings were signed by George Phillips and Moses Sawyer. The trustees chosen were Henry W. Denton, James Gale, Hiram Phillips, Calvin G. Sawyer, and Horace E. Denton.

This church, situated on the west bank of the Wallkill River, at the point formerly known as "the Outlet" of the Drowned Lands, may be said to have had its origin, in part, in the neighborhood prayer-meeting, held for years in the district school-house, in occasional religious services conducted by the pastors of the church of Goshen and other ministers, and in a Sabbath-school, commenced by Mrs. Lina Dolsen in 1815, and carried on with the help of some like-minded Christian women. No decisive steps were taken towards the erection of a building or the gathering of a congregation until the winter of 1838. During a period of severe sickness Henry W. Denton, one of the wealthiest residents at the Outlet, was led to devote a larger share of his wealth to the Lord's service than before, and took measures, in concert with his son-in-law, Theodore B. Denton, to build a church in their own neighborhood. They first proposed that Isaac Denton, a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and then living not far from the Outlet, should undertake the enterprise, assisted by the members of his own denomination, promising help in the undertaking. Mr. I. Denton, after conference with his own people, reported that they could not undertake to build. "Then," said the original projectors, "we will have a Presbyterian Church."

A paper, having for its object "the building of a Presbyterian meeting-house in the neighborhood of the Outlet Bridge, in the town of Minisink," was prepared, and H. W. Denton signed $500, and T. B. Denton $200, with a lot for the site of the building. Others in the vicinity made liberal subscriptions. When about $1600 had been pledged, a contract was made for the erection of the house. It was a framed structure, 40 by 52 feet, with a tower rising about 50 feet above the foundation, surmounted by four pinnacles, one on each corner. This building was finished in the spring of 1839. A contribution of $500, by Gabriel Wisner Denton, of New Orleans, deserves special mention. While on a visit to his friends, he offered $500 towards their enterprise on condition that previous subscribers would increase the amount pledged until the sum of $2600, required by the contract, was provided for. This condition was met. The cost of the building was about $3000.

It had been previously determined that a new name should be given to the village, and that of the largest contributors to the building of the church was chosen. In consequence of this action the name adopted for the new organization was The First Presbyterian Church of Denton.

The church was dedicated on the 27th of June, 1839, and at the same time the church was organized. Only eight members were prepared to unite in the organization. Their names were George Phillips, Calvin G. Sawyer, Harriet Sawyer, Moses Sawyer, Elizabeth Sawyer, John B. Gale, Mary McDowell Gale, and Maria Denton.

In September the Rev. O. M. Johnson, then supplying the church of Boonton, N. J., was called to the church of Denton. He was installed October 29th, having commenced his ministry here on the first Sabbath of that month. There were then about 30 families that might properly be regarded as belonging to the congregation. The church consisted of 11 members, three having been received at the first communion season in September.

Both church and congregation grew under the regular preaching of the word. The communicants in 1851 numbered 160, and the families more than 60.

In addition to the stated services at the church on the Sabbath, services were held in different neighborhoods, in adjacent school-houses on Sabbath afternoons, and for many years an alternate Sabbath evening service at Hampton and Denton; also about once each month at the Orange County Farm. In consequence of failing health Mr. Johnson asked the congregation to release him from the pastoral office. The relation was dissolved October, 1873. The pulpit had been occupied by temporary supplies most of the time during the preceding five months. It continued to be so supplied until Mr. McBeth was engaged for six months. After Mr. McBeth's departure an interval of nearly a year followed, when the Rev. Geo. H. Hick was engaged. He remained for four years, at the end of which he accepted a call to the western part of this State.

The Rev. David McLeod is the present pastor-elect, and is now supplying the pulpit.

The Sabbath-school was reorganized very soon after the commencement of Mr. Johnson's ministry, and has been continued with varying prosperity. During a part of this time Sabbath-schools were in operation in Hampton and in the neighborhood known as "The Gate," and were held at times in other neighborhoods.

The church-register shows that during the thirty-four years of Mr. Johnson's ministry more than 300 members were received to church fellowship.

The parsonage property was purchased in the autumn of 1842, with a tract of seventeen acres, at a cost of about $830. Additions to the house, the erection of needed outbuildings, and improvements of the land raised the value to about $3000.

The first church building was burned early in the morning of Feb. 1, 1858. Measures were taken to rebuild, and the present structure of brick was erected on the same site in the course of the year. It cost, with its furniture, about $4500. A bell was purchased in 1871. Its weight is 1040 pounds.

The church received a valuable legacy from the estate of Mr. H. W. Denton, which was used in rebuilding the edifice after the fire. Mr. T. B. Denton has also endowed the church with the sum of $5000, the interest of which is used annually towards the payment of the pastor's salary.

THE CENTREVILLE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

executed a certificate of incorporation Sept. 8, 1873. It was signed by John B. Hadden and Albert S. Brundage. The trustees named were Albert S. Brundage, George R. Miller, Charles S. Miller, O. C. Brundage, John B. Hadden, James Mulford, and Bradford Davey.

THE SOCIETY OF UNITED CHRISTIAN FRIENDS, professing the faith of universal salvation, was incorporated Sept. 20, 1813. The trustees named were Samuel Wells, Cyrus Skinner, Daniel St. John; and those certifying to the record were Daniel Green and William Wells, Jr. It is understood this enterprise was at Centreville.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

PINE HILL CEMETERY

was incorporated by a certificate bearing date Oct. 8, 1861, and recorded in the office of the county clerk on the 9th. The chairman of the meeting for organization was Simon Bradley, and the secretary Samuel S. Wickham. The trustees named were James F. Dolsen, Benjamin W. Bradley, Alva Bennett, Daniel Reeve, Theophilus Dolsen, William M. Dolsen. The grounds placed in charge of this incorporation are those of the old Dolsentown burial-place. The name is appropriately chosen. The summit is a beautiful, symmetrically-shaped elevation, commanding an extensive view of the surrounding country. Twelve pine-trees lift their dark-green foliage above the resting-place of the dead, memorials of the ancient forest that crowned the height. Stretching away in every direction is a magnificent rolling landscape of unsurpassed beauty, comprising rich, fertile farms, substantial, elegant dwellings, all indicating homes of wealth and abundant resources. This ground has evidently been used for burial from the earliest settlement. Here are the common field-stones that mark the earliest attempt at preserving the place of burial, but with neither name nor date. Then follow the old red stone, sometimes with quite elaborate carving, and with well-preserved inscriptions. Next are found the early plain slabs of marble, while to represent the later years there are the costly monuments which wealth delights to erect over the remains of the loved and the lost.

Next to Dolsentown, the old burying-ground on Slauson's Hill, near Stewarttown, is the oldest in Wayanda. The hill is literally covered with graves, but very few of them are marked with stones. The first buried there, before and in the time of the Revolution, had no head-stones to tell in what year they died. But a little below the crest of the hill there are several stones with inscriptions dating back to near the Revolution. Three of them read as follows:

"Dr. Henry White deceased Aug. 11, 1784, in the 35th year of his age."

"Tempe, wife of Dr. White, deceased Aug. 13, 1784, A. E. 25 yrs."

"Wm Halstead died May 19, 1811. A. E. 41 yrs."

Next to the town burying-ground comes the old Smith family burying-ground, lying between Brookfield and Ridgebury, containing 31 graves. Some of the inscriptions are as follows:

"Jonathan Smith, Senior, son of Benj. Smith, died May 10, 1797. A. E. 28 yrs."

"David Howell. Died Jan. 12, 1798. Age 26 yrs."

"Annie, Wife of Benj. Smith, Jr., and daughter of Capt. John Duncan. Born Nov. 3, 1766. Died April 11, 1811. A. E. 44 yrs."

"Benj. Smith, Junior, Sept. 18, 1825. Age, 55 yrs."

"Mary, Wife of Benj. Smith, and Daughter of Capt. Jonathan Cooley. Born Dec. 25, 1848. Died Sept. 20, 1893. Age, 54 yrs."

"Benj. Smith, Born July 11, 1745. Died Dec. 11, 1816. Age, 71 yrs."

Then follow Isaiah, Elizabeth, and Jesse Smith, in succession, together with others of later date down to 1832, when the family were nearly all gone.

There is also one in connection with the Baptist Church at Slate Hill. This is only a small plot, has but few stones erected and no early dates. The ground indicates, however, burials in considerable numbers. There is a burial-place in the Reeve neighborhood, midway between Slate Hill and Centreville. Of the old Smith burial-place a local writer says,—

"A few days ago, as I was going across the fields from Slate Hill to Ridgebury, and about midway between the two places, I came across a neglected burying-ground. No fences protected it from the encroachments of animals, and it was only distinguished from the adjacent fields by clumps of unsightly saplings, brush, and briars, which grew thickly upon and among the graves. An examination of the slabs showed that no one had been buried there for forty years. It may be interesting to some, as a scrap of local history, to know who the occupants of the graves are. By examining the inscriptions on the freestone slabs, I noticed that among those buried there were three or four of the first settlers in the vicinity of Slate Hill, and who once owned a large tract of land here, including the farms now owned by Thomas T. Durland, Silas Hulse, and a few others."

Southwest of Ridgebury is a burial-place dating back to early times, but there are no very early dates to be obtained there.

The cemetery in the Stewarttown district is located near the school-house and the Four Corners.

IX.—SOCIETIES.

In connection with the various churches there are the usual benevolent charitable and missionary organizations. Temperance societies have existed from time to time, but have left few or no memoranda for the historian to gather up. Masons or Odd-Fellows residing in Wawayanda belong to lodges in Middle-town.

X.—PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

JOGEE HILL.

This elevation is in the vicinity of the residence of Mr. Stephen W. Fullerton. The hill in some parts is quite steep, but not rocky, and is susceptible of cultivation. The base and the lands around it are light and sandy, and the locality bears evidence of having been covered by water at an early day, as previously intimated. A family of Indians resided south of and in the vicinity of this hill. Since these lands have been cultivated, abundance of Indian arrow-heads have been found. At the early settlement small images of various kinds were also found at this locality. Within a few days a field south of and adjoining the hill was plowed up, and many arrow-heads were found; and what is remarkable, the Indians must have manufactured them there, as some were found partly finished, and the flakes or chips slivered off in the operation were also found. The flint out of which the heads were made is not found in this town, nor at any locality in the State, as far as we know. Indeed, we are not informed where this flint is found in any large or small masses. The instrument with which the heads were made is conjectural. Stone would not answer the purpose, and they had no iron, and we are forced to conjecture that they used flint to manufacture articles out of flint.*

After this family had broken up and had left the town, two Indians, the last of the race, as it were, in this locality, remained. One lived at the hill just mentioned, and one upon the west bank of the Wallkill, several miles distant. Shortly before the war of the Revolution some Indians visited them from a distance, and when they returned the two solitary Indians left with them. These were the two last residents seen in the town. In remembrance of the one whose wigwam was at the hill, the citizens, to perpetuate the name of its last native occupant, called it Jogee, after the name of the Indian.

An Indian iron tomahawk, either found or obtained from an Indian in this locality, was presented to the Historical Association of Newburgh by Mrs. Stephen W. Fullerton, the whole of which is a pipe, the pole being the bowl, and the handle the stem. The tomahawk is now at Headquarters, Newburgh.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

Some of the finest land in Orange County for farming purposes is found in this town. Along the northern portion particularly there is a handsome rolling country divided into rich and productive farms. The Dolsentown neighborhood is scarcely surpassed by any in the State. At the present time there is little or no manufacturing in the town. Various mills have been already mentioned. Very choice stock is raised in Wawayanda, and the Dolsentown neighborhood has become famous for its fast horses. Of one of the most noted favorites of the turf the newspapers of the present year give the following item:

"St. Julian was sired by Goldsmith's Volunteer, and was raised by Mr. Joseph S. Dunning, of Dolsentown, who sold him to James Galway, of Goshen, for $600. Mr. Sargent, of Goshen, made $20,000 for St. Julian's

* Jogee also bore the name of Keghgekapowell. He was one of the grantors to Governor Dongan in 1684 of the lands embraced in the Evans Patent. (Ante, p. 12.)

owner in the first season. His dam was raised by the late Wm. H. Mead, of Wawayanda. Mr. Dunning also raised St. Reno, a full brother of St. Julian, now owned by Dr. H. A. Pooler, of Goshen."

XII.—MILITARY.

No rolls for the war of 1812 are to be obtained here, but some names are remembered of those who were called out at that time, viz.: Benjamin Dunning, Jonathan Bailey, Jr., John Hallock, Jonathan Dunning. As a modern town, there is no military history to be treated of separate from other towns until the civil war of 1861-65.

WAR OF 1861-65.

This town furnished at the outbreak of the war 7 men; from June, 1861, to July, 1862, 5; July and August, 1862, 53; under draft of 1863, personally, 2, by substitute, 1, by commutation, 25; under call of October, 1863, and March and July, 1864, 90; total (including commutants), 183, or (less commutants) 158. Of the number stated, 17 entered the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment, 2 the navy, 11 the Fifty-sixth Regiment; 3 the Eighteenth Regiment, 6 the Third Regiment; 10 in New York City regiments; balance not known. Under call of December, 1864, the town furnished 9 two-years' men to navy, 1 three-years' and 3 one-year men to volunteers.

By private subscription in 1863 $700 was raised and paid to drafted men.

The First Presbyterian Church of Ridgebury sent $140 to the Sanitary Commission.

At a special town-meeting duly called, held at the house of William H. Wood, Brookfield, Aug. 18, 1864, resolutions were adopted authorizing a tax of $36,000 for the payment of bounties to volunteers.

The amount of bounty to be paid to each was left to the discretion of a committee consisting of the town board and the following other citizens: John Cummings, Lewis Armstrong, Peter G. Flanagan, Reuben N. C. Mead, Henry C. Wickham, John B. Thompson, Benjamin P. Bailey, Thomas T. Durland, Joseph K. VanBommel.

It was voted to pay $300 to any citizen who might furnish a substitute in anticipation of a draft. The town board was authorized to issue the necessary bonds for the purpose of raising the money, payable in eight annual installments, Feb. 1, 1868, to Feb. 1, 1875, inclusive.

The resolutions were adopted by a vote of 118 in favor and 71 against. Of the sum voted, $26,800 was expended.

Under the call of December, 1864, $11,350 was expended. Under the settlement of that call an excess of thirty-nine years was allowed, and the paymaster-general paid the town $12,500.

The following list of men furnished for the suppression of the rebellion are mainly from official

GEORGE W. HORTON.

The Hortons are of English stock. The father of George W., Gilbert, was born in Goshen, Aug. 23, 1782. Here he followed the occupation of a farmer until his death, Feb. 3, 1854. He was united in marriage to Miss Sarah White, whose birth occurred Oct. 18, 1784, and to whom were born children,—Caroline, Eliza, Ocran, Susan, Chauncey, Mary Jane, Thomas A., George W., and Egbert J., of whom but four survive.

George W., the subject of this biographical sketch, was born March 8, 1824, in Goshen township, where his boyhood was spent. The advantages of education were at this time limited, and the labors of the farm were more imperative than any demands made by the district school-master. At the age of twenty-five Mr. Horton purchased the estate, embracing 200 acres, which is his present residence, and where he has since continued farming occupations, being extensively engaged in dairying. Jan. 22, 1851, Mr. Horton was united in marriage to Miss Henrietta, daughter of George and Melicent Ferguson Jackson, of Minisink, now Wawayanda township, whose birth occurred Dec. 28, 1825. They have had children,—Sarah E., deceased; Lawrence F., who is married to Harriet, daughter of Vincent Robinson; Chauncey, deceased; John B.; Florence W., deceased; and Emma J., who became Mrs. Y. A. Clark, and died, leaving children,—Henrietta and William. Mr. Horton is a Republican in politics, and manifests a laudable interest in public affairs, though debarred by his extensive business enterprises from active participation in political strife. In his religious professions he affiliates with the Presbyterians.

OLIVER R. CARPENTER.

The great-grandfather of the subject of this biography was Jesse C. Carpenter, who was of English parentage, and first settled upon Long Island. In 1732 he came to Goshen, Orange Co., and was soon after married to a daughter of John and Susan Colville Bradner, the former of whom was, during his early life, a resident of Edinburgh, Scotland, and chose Goshen as a home in 1721. Here he labored as a preacher of the gospel until his death, in 1732, and was the first expounder of the word of God in the hamlet of Goshen. Among the children of Jesse C. was Benjamin, whose birth occurred in 1754, and who served with credit in the war of the Revolution as one of the garrison of Fort Montgomery. He was married to Miss Chandler, of Craigville, Orange Co., to whom were born children,—Nathaniel, James, Samuel, and a daughter, Hannah. The death of Benjamin Carpenter occurred Sept. 28, 1828. The birth of his son Nathaniel, the father of Oliver C., occurred May 2, 1777, in the East Division of the town of Goshen. His boyhood was devoted to labor, varied by attendance at the public school of the district, after which he acquired the trade of a mason at Washingtonville, but later removed to Hamptonburgh, where he followed farming pursuits. He was married on the 10th of February, 1809, to Philotta, daughter of Joel Coleman, the latter of whom was a soldier at the battle of White Plains, during the Revolutionary war, and died Oct. 20, 1840. Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Carpenter had children,—John C., born in 1810; Oliver R., whose birth occurred in 1813; Julia Ann, born in 1817; Mary C., born in 1819; and William H., born in 1824. The death of Nathaniel Carpenter occurred July 3, 1846. His son Oliver C., whose birth occurred June 30, 1813, in the East Division of the town of Goshen, passed the early portion of his life in Hamptonburgh as a farmer. In 1851, having a desire to extend his business relations, he purchased the farm in Wawayanda township, which is his present home, and where his time is still spent in the superintendence of his landed interests. Mr. Carpenter was on the 14th of November, 1850, united in marriage to Miss Phebe Jane, daughter of Joshua McNish, of Middletown. Their children are George W.,^a born in 1852; John W., in 1853; Charles Oliver, in 1858; Mary Ida (deceased), in 1860; Lillie Dale, in 1863; Maggie Jane (deceased), in 1865; and Nathaniel Bradner (deceased), in 1868. Mr. Carpenter has always followed farming pursuits, and is now extensively engaged in dairying. In politics he is a Democrat, and cast his first vote for Gen. Andrew Jackson. Though always manifesting a deep interest in public affairs, he rarely participates in the political conflicts of the day. Mr. Carpenter became a member of the Congregational Church of Middletown in 1850, and both he and Mrs. Carpenter are still among its active supporters.

GREENVILLE.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

GREENVILLE is in the southwest part of the county. Its boundaries may be stated with approximate accuracy as north by Mount Hope, east by Wawayanda and Minisink, south by the State of New Jersey, and west by Deerpark. The area of the town, as stated in the supervisors' report of 1879-80, is 17,665 acres; the assessed valuation, $459,120; and the tax collected upon that basis, $3561.35. This town was a part of the Minisink Patent.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The distinguishing outlines in the topography of the town are the Shawangunk Mountains, whose summits form the western boundary, and the Boudinot Creek, which flows northward a little east of the centre, and approximately parallel to the mountains. This stream is a tributary of Rutger's Creek, and it flows northward to the line of Mount Hope, then abruptly reverses its course and flows south to unite with Rutger's Creek on the town line between Minisink and Wawayanda. The other branch of Rutger's Creek also rises on the slopes of the Shawangunk range in Greenville, flows southeasterly to Waterloo Mills in Minisink, thence northward, and by a nearly direct line effects a junction with the other branch, on the south line of Wawayanda.

Binnenwater covers about fifty acres. Its outlet is a tributary of Rutger's Creek. The pond lies about two miles south of the village of Mount Hope, one and a half miles southeast of Finchville, and about one mile south from the boundary line between Mount Hope and Greenville. It was originally a very important landmark, as constituting the southwest corner of the Evans Patent. In the old deed the pond was called "Maretange." After the vacating of the Evans Patent, and the making of other changes in lines, the pond lost its early importance in determining boundary lines and land titles. The Pakadasink Swamp, north and northeast of Smith's Corners, is a tract of considerable extent, and in this the Shawangunk kill has its source, the kill itself having been known by the name of the swamp formerly. (See General History, p. 37.)

The Shawangunk Mountains, on the west border, are from two hundred to four hundred feet above the neighboring valleys, and from fourteen hundred to sixteen hundred above tide-water. The eastern slopes of the mountains are gradual, with little or no rocky land, and arable to their summits. The geological and mineralogical features of the town are interesting. The mining enterprises are alluded to elsewhere.

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The town is modern in its civil organization, and its early settlement is blended with that of Minisink, from which its territory was taken. Like the other portions of Minisink it was a part of the old precinct of Goshen. The settlers who were upon its territory prior to the Revolution are found in the general assessment-roll given in the chapters upon Minisink and Wawayanda, and in the list of signers to the Revolutionary Articles of Association. For the period immediately succeeding the Revolution we are dependent mostly upon names obtained in the records of the town of Minisink, supplemented by the information derived from some of the older citizens.

It is stated in "Hough's Gazetteer of New York," that Greenville was probably settled from 1720 to 1730, but no authority is adduced in support of the statement, while the dates obtained from Minisink town-books and from other authority do not extend back of the Revolution more than ten or fifteen years.

The following may be mentioned as among the earliest families who settled in Greenville:

Abraham Elston located soon after the Revolutionary war on the place now owned by Rev. Mr. Frazier.

Garrett Durland and John Durland were located in Greenville at an early day.

Oliver Blizard resided in Greenville before 1800.

Godfrey Lutes was living on this territory before the Revolution. In the general assessment-roll of 1775 his name appears in District No. 6, Joshua Davis, assessor.

Jonathan Van Tuyl, whose name appears in the cattle-records of Minisink soon after the Revolution, was an early settler of Greenville. He was the father of Arthur Van Tuyl. There is a stone house now standing in Clark's district, and owned by Ira Hallock, which is supposed to have been built before the Revolution, and known as the Van Tuyl homestead.

James Simon located in Greenville at an early day.

Elijah Smith lived in Greenville soon after the Revolution.

John Manning and Joseph Manning were early settlers. The homestead of Joseph Manning was the place now owned by Joseph Manning of the present generation. The children of the pioneer, Joseph, were Joseph, Jr., John, Isaac, Richard, Walter, Benjamin, and Mrs. Judge James Finch, Mrs. Eleazer Hulbert, Mrs. John Fogger. John Manning, a son of Benjamin, is now residing near the village of Greenville. The original Manning farm was a large tract bought at five shillings per acre. It is the opinion of John Manning that the brothers, John and Joseph, were settled here before the Revolution.

Joseph Reed, whose name appears in the cattle-mark records of Minisink soon after the Revolution, was settled within the limits of what is now Greenville.

Israel Hallock was in Greenville at an early day.

Isaac Finch is mentioned in several of the early papers we have quoted. He was located before the Revolution in the well-known Finch neighborhood, north part of Greenville or south part of Mount Hope.

Abraham Harding, Stephen Amesbury, Sylvester Cortright, Jonathan Wood, Benjamin Cole, Moses Cortright, and Eusebius Austin were also early settlers in Greenville.

Robert Eaton settled, soon after the Revolution, at what has since been known as Eatontown. His sons were John, William, Robert, Samuel. Daniel H. Eaton, son of John, resides a mile from Slate Hill, Wawayanda, at the old Fullerton tavern stand. Alexander Eaton was also a pioneer in Greenville at the same time with Robert. He had one son, Thomas. A grandson, James Eaton, is a resident of Port Jervis.

Coming down to a later period, 1813, it is easy to show what families were then living on the territory of the present town of Greenville. In that year the school districts of the old town of Minisink were organized under the school law of 1812, and were recorded by naming the families in each. These are preserved in the first volume of the town-records of Minisink. While some districts may cross the modern boundary lines of the towns, and while it may be difficult to be sure after the lapse of sixty-seven years that all the families named were in Greenville, yet a majority must have been, and any others included must have resided very near.

School District No. 12, as numbered in 1813, included the families of the following persons: David Slauson, Caleb Green, Zadoc Mead, James Simon, Joseph Elston, Abraham Elston, Samuel Elston, Charles McCluskey, Wm. P. Lee, Sanford Allen, Bodewine Cortright, Jonathan Wood, Elias Clark, Gilbert Vail, James Green, Garret Brink, Jeremiah Hazen, David Hance, Benjamin Wells, Lewis Stiles, Thomas Tuthill, John Owen, Asa Carpenter, Moses Slauson, Abraham Hazen, Samuel Brink.

District No. 13, as formed in 1813, included the families of the following persons: Barnabas Midgough, Widow Mary Terry, William Brink, Charles Wood, Isaac Becket, Philip Millsbaugh & Son, Levi Lutes, Daniel Woodward, William McMullin, Jr., Philip Lee, Barnabas Lynch, Oliver Hulse, John Milligan, Thomas T. Collard, Jesse Canfield, Joseph Drake, Widow Martha Sullivan, Robert Jaquish, Sylvanus Quarters, Isaac Harrison, William Graham, Garret Durland, Hugh McConly, William Polly, John Cromwell. In 1826, John Holly was attached to this district. This is the old Bushville district, and is number "four," as now designated in Greenville.

District No. 16, as formed in 1813, included the following families: William Osband, Widow Catharine Davenport, Martin Davenport, Abel G. Smith, Jonathan Owen, John Whitmore, Noyes Wickham, Jr., Samuel Bodle, Increase B. Stoddard, Oliver Lewis, William Patterson, John Story, Alanson H. Story, James Scribner, Shaw Young, John Peckham, Washington Hutchins, Joshua Peckham, John Ferguson, Joel Rundle, John Bodle, Jr., Daniel Bodle.

District No. 17, as originally formed, comprised the following families: Jonathan Rundle, John Wood, John Durland, Benjamin Manning, Dennis Kelly, Caleb Clark, Joshua Baker, Widow Ann Smith, William McBride, Daniel Green, Alexander Bodle, John Van Tuyl, Richard Drake, Jonathan Van Tuyl, Walter Van Tuyl, Dennis Sullivan, Luther Hallock, Hulet Clark, Jesse Edsall, Timothy Collard, Isaac Peterson, Joseph Green, John Gordon, Walter Manning, Abraham Ketcham, Asa Hutchins, Samuel Van Seay, Aaron Howell.

District No. 18 was the old Eatontown district, and in 1813 included the following families: William Moore, Usher Moore, Isaiah Hazen, Peter Quick, John Jervis, James Mulford, John Remy, Robert Eaton, Jr., Samuel Wells, Jones Wood, John Sigler, Benjamin Holly, Zebulon Hallock, Oliver Blizard, Charles Green, John Blizard, Thomas W. Hallock, Jos. Hallock, Levi Winter, Abner Skinner, Ebenezer Weller, James Eaton, Robert Eaton, John Beshdon, Jesse Benjamin, John Polly, Alexander Eaton.

Old District No. 19, of 1813, included a portion of both of the present towns of Minisink and Greenville, and perhaps of Mount Hope, and is given for convenience at this place: William Wells, Jesse Mulock, William Graham, Jesse Smith, John Totten, George Wood, Charles Buchanan, Stephen Armsbury, John Reynolds, Nathan Chapman, Widow Bond, Widow Daniel Stewart, Samuel Schoonover, William Goble.

PHYSICIANS.

Dewitt C. Hallock, born in Ridgebury, Wawayanda, graduated in New York, practiced in Denton and Wawayanda, and for the last five or six years of his life in Greenville. He died in 1864.

Dr. Farries practiced here about two years. Dr. Monell also practiced a short time, and until his death. There is now no resident physician. The one old physician of the town for a long series of years was Dr. Church.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

After Wawayanda was formed from the old town of Minisink, the remaining portion was in very inconvenient form for the transaction of town business, and a short time only sufficed to develop and bring to success a project for a new town. It was organized in 1853, and the first town-meeting held in the spring of 1854.

FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

At an annual town-meeting held in the town of Greenville on the 28th of March, 1854, at the house of Jonathan Woods, in Bushville, in said town, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved, That the next annual town-meeting be held at Greenville, in said town.

"Resolved, That the sum of fifty dollars be raised for the support of roads and bridges.

"Resolved, That there be only two constables elected in this town.

"Resolved, That there be only one commissioner of highways elected in said town."

Presiding officers, Wallace Clark, Zephaniah Brink, Zopher Finch. Entry of March 29, 1854. Town Clerk, Isaac Winter.

The officers elected were Timothy Wood, supervisor; Isaac Winter, town clerk; Jesse V. Myers, Charles Smith, justices of the peace; George T. Durland, town superintendent of schools; John C. V.—VILLAGES.

GREENVILLE.

bearing the same name as the town, is centrally situated on the road leading from Goshen to Carpenter's Point. This was known in early years as Minisink village, a name liable to confusion since the division of the town, which left the village Minisink in the town of Greenville. The post-office at Greenville is still known as Minisink. The postmaster at the present time is J. Wallace Brown. The present business at Greenville is the store of Hallock & Forgeson; hotel, by James Elston; blacksmith-shop, James A. Straight; wagon-shop, Henry Simpson; drug manufacturing, by D. C. Hallock; butcher, Robert C. Burns, delivering to the Port Jervis market. The Baptist church is located here, and the school-house of District No. 5. The present teacher is Mary Reed.

CENTRE POINT

is a hamlet in the south part of the town and near the line of Minisink, popularly known as Log Town or Jackson's Corners. A blacksmith-shop, by George Dickson, and D. V. Myers is also engaged in butchering and delivering regularly to Port Jervis.

SMITH'S CORNERS

is a short distance north of the village of Greenville, and is situated on the direct road that runs along the eastern base of the Shawangunk Mountains. There is a creamery located here, owned and carried on by D. M. Clark; a blacksmith-shop, by Richard Ireland. This was formerly a thriving place, with hotels and store, being situated on the main road from Otisville to Coleville, N. J.

is situated nearly central from north to south. This is a well-known point in town and somewhat central, the first town-meeting having been held there. A blacksmith-shop, by Ira Baird; S. R. Decker is engaged in butchering and delivering three times a week to Port Jervis.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

At the time Greenville was incorporated only three years remained of the old system of town supervision, all the control of the schools being transferred to the Assembly district commissioners by the law of 1856. The town superintendent of schools elected in 1854 was George T. Durland. In 1856, Samuel S. Graham was chosen to that office, but was "legislated out" before he was sworn in by the new law appointing district commissioners in June of that year. The early school districts are shown under the head of early settlements, as taken from the town books of Minisink.

At the last apportionment of the public money (March, 1880), District No. 1 included 35 children, and received $108.33; District No. 2, 45 children, and $104.55; District No. 3, 42 children, and $113.97; District No. 4, 64 children, and $135.01; District No. 5, 83 children, and $148.40; District No. 6, 40 children, and $105.87; District No. 7, 32 children, and $86.37. The whole number of children being 341, and the whole amount of money disbursed $803.50.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE BAPTIST SOCIETY OF GREENVILLE

effected a legal organization Jan. 27, 1816. The proceedings were signed by James Finch, Jr., deacon, and by David Slauson. The meeting was held at the house of Jonathan Wood, and the trustees chosen were James Finch, Jr., Joseph Elston, Hulet Clark, Thomas P. Young, Benjamin Manning, and Benjamin Drake. We are indebted to the church clerk, Mr. George A. Durland, for the following paper:

The Greenville Baptist house of worship was built in the year 1816, being a branch or an out-station of the Brookfield Church until July 31, 1822, when a council was called consisting of the following-named persons and churches they represented in such council, at the meeting-house in Greenville, viz.: (Warwick) Elder Philander Gillett, Deacon James Burt, Jeffrey Wisner, (Second Wantage) Elder Zelotus Grenell, Deacon Peter Wintermute, Ebenezer Mead, (Middle-town) Elder Thomas P. Terry, Elihu Cary, (Brookfield) Henry Ball, Deacon John Hallock, James Lain, for the purpose of constituting a Baptist Church of Christ in that place. Elder Henry Ball was chosen moderator, and Jonathan Wood clerk; prayer by T. P. Terry; the articles of faith were read and agreed to by all present; prayer by Elder Hadley; adjourned to two o'clock P.M.

Met agreeable to adjournment. Elder Z. Grenell preached the constitution sermon; Elder H. Ball gave the church their charge; J. P. Terry gave the right hand of fellowship; prayer by Elder Hadley. The following-named persons were dismissed from the Brookfield Baptist Church, July 6, 1822, for the purpose of forming themselves into a separate organization at Greenville, being the constituent members of the church, viz.: James Finch, Jr., David Slauson, Aaron W. Rundle, Joseph Elston, Daniel Durand, Usher Moore, Aaron Howell, Joel Rundle, Jacob Elston, Jonathan Wood, Holmes Elliott, David Elston, Phebe Moore, Sarah Howell, Wealthy Harrison, Eleanor Philips, Mary Van Tyle, Nancy Durand, Rebecca Rundle, Nancy Rundle, Sarah Ketchum, Elsie Rundle, Fanny Wood, Elizabeth Elston, Myra Anna Durland, Asenath Durland, Lydia Elston, Elsie Slauson, Louisa Slauson, Prudence Slauson, and Sarah Young.

Aug. 3, 1822, the following-named persons were dismissed from the Brookfield Church to unite with the church at Greenville: Jesse Howell, Clarissa Polly, Jonathan Moore, Elizabeth Moore, Dennis Sullivan, Charity Sullivan, Fanny Stone, Phebe Harrison, Phebe Seybolt, Priscilla Hazen, Nancy Manning, Rosilla Durland, Rebecca Spencer, Mary Grey, Amy Norris, Mary Caskey, Ruth Patterson, Lucretia McCane, Sarah Wood, Martha Rogers, Benjamin Elston, and Mary Howell.

Nov. 3, 1838, the following-named persons, members of the Greenville Baptist Church, were dismissed to form a separate organization at Port Jervis, viz.: Gilbert F. Mondon, Nehemiah L. Mondon, Samuel Barrett, David Decker, Joseph Gibson, Catharine S. Mondon, Nancy J. Pierson, Parmelia Birdsall, Catharine Malcom, Mary E. Mondon, Lydia Gumaer, Jane Rhodes, Elizabeth Thompson, and Jane Gumaer.

At the regular meeting of the church, held Aug. 31, 1822, James Finch, Jr., David Slauson, Aaron Rundle, and Jonathan Wood were elected deacons, and Jacob Elston church clerk; these were the first officers of the church.

Elder Henry Ball was pastor of the church from the time of its organization until about the year 1833. It was afterward supplied by Rev. D. Bennett, at that time residing near Unionville, Orange Co., until 1837. At that time the church settled as their pastor Rev. William H. Jurton, from Philadelphia, who is still living, having charge of a church in Iowa. In the year 1840 Rev. D. Bennett became pastor of the church and continued as such until 1843, when he was succeeded by Rev. C. Brinkerhoof, who continued pastoral relations with the church two years. The church then called the Rev. Joseph Haughwout, of Middletown, as their pastor; he continued in charge of the church until 1848, when he died. The church then extended a call to the Rev. Stephen Case, who took charge of the church in May, 1848, and has continued as pastor up to the present time. Owing to the imperfection of the records but little is known of the history of the above-named pastors excepting the last mentioned (Rev. S. Case); he was born in the town of Minisink, near Westtown, in the year 1818, of parents who were among the earlier inhabitants of the place where they lived. His grandfather, Ebenezer Mead, was prominently identified with the interests of the Baptist denomination throughout this region of country. Mr. Case united with the Mount Salem Baptist Church in 1837, was educated for the ministry at the Madison University, New York, and ordained as a minister of the gospel at Beemerville, N. J. (being pastor of that church at the time), in 1846, and continued pastoral relations with that church until he settled at Greenville.

The present officers of the church are as follows, viz.: Deacons, Coe Manning, Jonathan Stanton, S. V. Jones, A. T. Baird, G. A. Durland; Church Clerk, G. A. Durland. Number of communicants, 116.

From the records in the office of the county clerk it appears that this church executed a new certificate of incorporation under date of Dec. 29, 1866, the paper being signed by Stephen Case and Lemuel H. Slauson; and the trustees named were Samuel H. Slauson, George McBride, Evan G. Carpenter, Col. Manning, Alexander T. Baird, and Geo. A. Durland.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF GREENVILLE

executed a certificate of incorporation Dec. 23, 1850. The proceedings were signed by Henry Clark and John Manning. The trustees chosen were Isaac P. King, John Manning, Henry Clark, Joseph Clark, Horace P. Shultz.

The house of worship is said to have been built about fifty years ago, and a church was doubtless formed much earlier than the above date of incorporation indicates. Mr. John Manning states that he himself joined the church in 1836. Other early Methodists were Increase B. Stoddard, Sr. and Jr., Simon M. Stoddard, Abel J. Smith and wife, Samuel Smith, and Henry Clark.

Early ministers were Rev. Sedgwick Rusling, Rev. Mr. Grace, and Rev. Bromwell Andrews, the latter about 1836.

The present organization consists of Rev. Henry Litts, pastor; Leader, John Manning; Stewards, John Manning, Joseph E. Moore, Robert C. Burns; Trustees, William L. Clark, David Clark, William F. Bodle, William Maloy, Joseph P. Van Ness, Robert C. Burns, James C. Debevoys, Peter Shandaberg; Superintendent of Sunday-school, Joseph E. Moore.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

There are several burial-places in town, none of them, however, showing dates early enough to assist much in determining the time of settlement.

They are as follows: the Manning yard, north part of the town; an old ground near the above, mostly of the Seybolt family, in which there is said to be one stone bearing the name of Sullivan and nearly one hundred years old; the Seeley ground in the western part of the town; an old family lot on the Boudewine Cortright farm; a dilapidated family lot on the old Isaac King farm; a small family lot on the Cornelius Van Buskirk farm; a private lot, well kept, on the Mulock farm; a family lot on the Luther Hallock farm in fair condition; a small family lot on the old Remy farm, and one on the Webb Jenks' farm.

IX.—SOCIETIES, INCORPORATIONS, Etc.

THE MINERAL SPRING MINING COMPANY

executed a certificate of incorporation on Sept. 26, 1864. The object was declared to be the "mining and vending of lead and other minerals." The capital stock was fixed at $500,000, to be divided into 100,000 shares. The trustees named were Marvin Beeman, Benjamin E. Brennan, John Eager, Ambrose W. Green, Lewis Beach, F. V. Booth, and John T. Willis.

THE GREENVILLE MINERAL AND MINING COMPANY

filed a legal certificate Aug. 6, 1864, increasing the number of trustees to eight, and naming the following: John Eager, of Batavia, N. Y.; F. V. Booth, of New York City; Albert H. Hager, of Brooklyn; Thomas C. Robbins, of Windham, Conn.; and Russell H. Hoadley as the additional members of the board. The instrument was signed by Russell H. Hoadley, M. Brennan, A. W. Green.

X.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The town is emphatically a rural farming district. There are no villages of any large growth and no manufactories of prominence. Most of the crops common to this section of country are cultivated. Considerable wheat is produced. At the present time (November, 1880) there are several fields green and luxuriant as those of Western New York. Still, the town is mostly a grazing district, dairying being a large business. Besides the items of business mentioned in connection with the villages, there are also establishments for butchering by B. A. Conkling and John Burns. There is a creamery by J. L. Van Fleet in the south part of the town, and another in the eastern part by Samuel Van Fleet.

Moore & Van Ness is a firm engaged somewhat extensively in buying live stock and hides. There is a saw-mill and also a cider-mill by Levi Decker.

XI.—MILITARY.

The quotas assigned to the town under official calls during the Rebellion were as follows:

	Quota. Credit.
July and August, 1862.....	37	35
July, 1863, to July, 1864 (consolidated).....	33	23
July, 1864.....	29	30
December, 1864.....	4	4
	103	92

In settlement with the State, under the bounty act of 1865, the town was allowed an excess of forty-two years, $8400, and for volunteers, $3000; total, $11,400.

In regard to bonds issued by the town (of which there is no record in the office of the town clerk), Wm. L. Clark, the present supervisor, writes:

" Bonds issued August, 1864.....	$25,159.00
" " Feb. 11, 1865.....	6,000.00
Total.....	$31,159.00

"The last bond was paid Feb. 11, 1871. Our quota of men under each call was furnished, and in addition thereto a number of volunteers were recruited prior to first call (July, 1862). Only a partial list of volunteers has been preserved."

DEER PARK.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

DEERPARK is situated at the extreme western angle of the county, and is triangular in outline. Its boundaries may be stated as follows: North by Sullivan County, southeast by Mount Hope and Greenville, and southwest by the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania and by the county of Sullivan. The area of this town is 38,034 acres, as given in the last supervisors' report, but, as often explained, this is only an approximation to the true area. The assessed valuation of the town, 1879-80, was $2,431,680, and the total taxes collected upon that basis were $37,374.27. The title to the soil of this town is derived through the Minisink Patent, with the exception of certain small tracts,—the Arent Schuyler Patent, the Tietsoort Patent, and the Cuddeback Patent. The Tietsoort Patent was for 400 acres. The deed from the Indians to Tietsoort in 1700 is of record in Ulster County clerk's office. His patent is also preserved.

Perhaps there is no place more appropriate than this for a brief statement concerning the dispute over the line between the States of New York and New Jersey, which lasted for many years and involved territory which is now in the town of Deerpark. For a long period the owners of the 1200-acre patent and of the Minisink Patent were troubled by a tedious conflict with the inhabitants of New Jersey, growing out of the uncertain location of the line between New York and New Jersey, one side claiming it to be further south to a certain point on the Delaware River, and the other farther north to a certain point on the same river. It so happened that the line claimed by New Jersey ran through the 1200-acre patent in this county, and certain persons in that State procured a Jersey colony title for a tract of land extending north to this claimed line, and covering a large portion of the 1200 acres. As the line remained unsettled, no action at law could be maintained by either party, and consequently many hard personal struggles took place to maintain or get possession of the lands in question.

The whole difficulty grew out of determining what and where "the northwardmost branch of the Delaware River" was. Both parties starting at the same point on the Hudson River, in latitude 40°, New York contended for a line which would strike the Delaware at the southern extremity of Big Minisink Island,* while the line insisted upon by New Jersey would strike the Delaware just south of Cochection, making a triangular gore of land between them, growing wider as it ran to the west, where it was several miles wide. In the final settlement this gore was about equally divided between the parties, after being a bone of contention for nearly seventy-five years. Some of the patentees having sold out to others of their number and removed, the party in possession was weakened; in consequence of which, and to regain their strength, they gave some of their lands to Harmanus Van Inwegen, a bold and strong man, and who had married a daughter of one of the Swartwouts. The following incident may serve to prove his intrepidity:

Maj. Swartwout resided on the lands in dispute, and some two miles from the settlement on the undisputed part. Some of the Jersey claimants were watching for an opportunity to enter his house and get possession before he could procure help from his neighbors. He was aware of it, and to counteract the attempt and repel the invaders kept a number of guns ready loaded in his house, with some additional men to work his farm, and lend assistance in a case of emergency. He was major in the militia of the then county of Orange, about the years 1730 or 1740. Notwithstanding the major's precautions to defend his possessions, it appears that at a certain time, about the year 1730, his family were expelled and his goods removed out of the house, and possession taken by the intruders. Assistance was procured from Goshen, which, with the inhabitants of this neighborhood, expelled the inmates and reinstated the major. Afterwards they were informed that the Jerseymen had collected a strong party, with which on a certain day they intended to dispossess the occupants generally on the disputed lands. When the day came the occupants, fathers and sons, all assembled at the house of Harmanus Van Inwegen armed with guns and fully equipped. When the Jersey company came in view, the occupants went out into

* It is difficult to see any basis for this New York claim in the words of the grant. The New Jersey claim line had the certain merit of running to the mouth of some branch, if not to the true one, but the New York claim line does not seem to have been run to the mouth of any branch of the Delaware at all.

the road and formed themselves in line for battle. The Jersey men unexpectedly finding these men collected and armed for mortal combat, became suddenly daunted in their military courage and hastily retreated to the nearest woods. This occurred when Gerardus Swartwout was a young man, and about 1740.

The last struggle between the parties was to capture and imprison the major and Johannes Westbrook, both of whom lived on the battle-ground. Any open effort to capture the major was known to be envired with great difficulty, and the Jersey men undertook to effect it on the Sabbath, at the door of the church. This was between the years 1764-67, and when the Rev. Thomas Romeyn was pastor, he being settled at Flatbush, L. I., till 1764. To accomplish it they collected a strong party, who came armed with clubs on the day appointed, and when the minister preached in the church of Maghaghkemek surrounded it. After the services were ended, and the major and Capt. Westbrook had gone out, they were made prisoners after a harsh struggle. The major was taken and confined in the Jersey colony prison, from which he was soon released. Not long after this, by the establishment of a new line between the colonies, as previously remarked, all the border disputes and personal frays ended.*

A careful statement of this whole controversy is given in the annual report of the State geologist of New Jersey for the year 1874. The narrative has already been brought down to 1762.† It required, however, several years longer to complete the adjustment. Commissioners were appointed by each State, but no satisfactory agreement was reached until a royal act was obtained, passed "at the court of St. James the 1st day of September, 1773." This act determined the points for running the line substantially as it now exists. It remained for commissioners appointed by the States of New York and New Jersey to actually run the line. The New Jersey commissioners—John Stevens and Walter Rutherford—made their report April 15, 1775, and it was approved by the Legislature of New Jersey. The New York Commissioners were William Wickham and Samuel Gale. The joint report had been previously made, Nov. 30, 1774, and that was based upon the certificate of the actual surveyors,—James Clinton, of Ulster Co., N. Y., and Anthony Dennis, of Monmouth Co., N. J., dated Nov. 26, 1774. These papers closed a controversy which had existed for more than sixty years.

* The following affidavit (for which and for several other papers of interest the publishers are indebted to Wm. H. Nearpass, editor of the Port Jervis Gazette), though made after the disputed boundary question had been settled, would seem to favor the claims of New Jersey that the intersection of the State line with the Delaware was at Shoacan (Hancock):

One hundred years later (1874) a survey of this line was made by commissioners appointed by the respective State Legislatures. A careful verification of the initial points was made by the aid of the officers of the United States Coast Survey, and a rectification of the intermediate points. Those desiring a detailed account of this resurvey, and a full statement respecting all the intermediate milestones, will find it in the report quoted above.‡

AN EARLY TRIP TO THE MINISINK REGION.

The name Minisink, in nearly its present form, has evidently been in use two hundred years or more. Its correct original orthography is Minnisink. The earliest maps of the New Netherlands sent to Europe described this section of country as occupied by a tribe of Indians known as the Minquas. In documents drawn up during the early years of the subsequent English rule they were called the Minsies. It is something of an abrupt and perhaps tame conclusion to which previous historians have arrived, that the word Minsies, or Minquas, became, by a process of growth or corruption, Minisinks.§

Whether this is the correct origin or not, the latter name appears in 1694 in the journal of Capt. Arnt Schuyler, who visited this region for the purpose of ascertaining whether the influence of the French had penetrated to the Indians living here. The slaughter at Schenectady and the destruction of that town had occurred only a few years before, and a state of almost perpetual war existed. Capt. Schuyler's visit is supposed to have been the first entry of a white man into this immediate section, and his report has therefore special interest. We give it below:*

† A map drawn in 1765 shows the present line, and was probably the first map upon which it appeared.

‡ We refer also to a recent valuable pamphlet with the following title: "Notes and Memoranda relating to the West New Jersey Society of West New Jersey. By John Clement, of Haddonfield. S. Chew, Printer, Camden, N. J." It is there shown that the controversy was largely one involving title to the soil, and not entirely a question of State jurisdiction. It is also stated that the society still maintains an organization in London, has an annual meeting, appoints its ancient committees, and disposes of a solid English dinner, all in due form.

II. NATURAL FEATURES.

The topography of this town is marked and peculiar. In the eastern portion is the broad valley of the Neversink, extending almost in a straight course from northeast to southwest. Along this valley the early settlers, attracted by the fertility of the soil, made their first openings in the forest. Not far from the Neversink River, and nearly parallel to it, the hand of art has supplemented nature by that great enterprise, the Delaware and Hudson Canal.

The only tributaries of the Neversink from the east, with one exception, are unimportant rivulets flowing down from the slopes of the Shawangunk Mountains.

Several similar rivulets also unite at various points from the west. One of greater importance, the Old Dam Kill, flows into the Neversink at Huguenot. This is formed of two branches, which drain a large portion of the centre of this town and afford valuable water-power. Basha's Kill, the largest tributary from the east, skirts the base of a high range of hills in the northeast part of the town, and unites with the Neversink east of Cuddebackville.

On the southwest the Delaware River divides the town from the State of Pennsylvania, and on the west the Mongaup, a branch of the Delaware, forms the boundary line between Deerpark and Sullivan County. One tributary of the Mongaup drains the Quarry Hill district; upon this are the Bushkill Falls. A branch of the Delaware, uniting at Bolton Basin, drains a large portion of the higher central part of the town. Through the Honesville district there is another small tributary of the Delaware which rises in the Highlands near Huguenot. Big Pond is about one mile long and half a mile wide. Its outlet is known as Shingle Kill. Little Pond is about one-fourth of a mile in diameter. Its outlet is Old Dam Brook, so called from an ancient dam. The Grassy Swamp is an extensive tract in the western angle of the town, lying between Sullivan County and the Mongaup River. It is low and wet, overgrown with long, coarse grass. The stream passing through it is known as Grassy Swamp Brook.

The surface of the town may be described in general terms as a mountainous upland, broken by the numerous streams, many of which flow through deep, rocky ravines. The higher lands of the central and west portions end with steep declivities along the Delaware River. Near Port Jervis, Mount William and Point Peter form attractive features of the landscape.

The name Basha's Kill is said to be derived from an Indian squaw-sachem (a specimen of woman's rights) who lived on the banks of the stream near Westbrookville. Her name is reported in tradition as Basha Bashiba, and she is said to have been very friendly to the whites, all of which may be accepted as a safe explanation until a better one appears.† The valleys are distinguished as follows: the Mamakating Valley lies along Basha's Kill; the Neversink flows through the Suckapack Valley to its junction with Basha's Kill; below the junction is the Neversink Valley proper, generally called Peenpack in the early annals, and extends from the junction to the mouth of the Neversink at Carpenter's Point.

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

It has already been shown in the General History that Wm. Tietzort (said to be the same name as the one now written Titsworth) fled from Schenectady at the capture of that town in 1689 by the Indians; that he barely escaped with his life and came to Esopus; that very soon he went to the Minisink country, where, after residing several years upon a tract of land, he obtained in 1698 the right to purchase; that he did so

* It is not certain that he was in the Neversink Valley above Carpenter's Point. His route "Northwest" makes it, however, probable that he went through the pass at Otisville or further south, near Carpenter's Point.

† Ante, p. 40.

purchase; that his title, afterwards disputed, was confirmed, and was one of the exceptions to the Minisink Patent. He afterwards sold to John Decker, and it is believed that further investigation will show that his location was the present Benjamin Van Vleet place, near Port Jervis.

Early settlements within the present limits of this town were also made at Peenpack, and on the southern portion of that long and narrow valley of partially alluvial land known as Mamakating Hollow.

Some of the original settlers came from the settlements of the Dutch on the Hudson, at Kingston and its vicinity. Following the flat lands on the banks of the streams to the southward, they wandered along the valley just mentioned to the Delaware River. These tenants of the valley took possession, and occupied such portions of the country as suited their tastes, regardless of the real ownership.

In the year 1697 a patent was granted to Arent Schuyler for "A certain tract of land in the Minisink country, in the province of New York, called by the native Indians Sankhekeneck, otherwise Mayhawaem; also another tract, called Warinsayskmeck, situated upon a river called Mennessincks, before a certain island called Menagnock, which tract is adjacent or near to a tract of land called Maghaghkemek, containing the quantity of one thousand acres and no more."

In the same year another patent was granted to Jacob Codebec, Thomas Swartwout, Anthony Swartwout, Bernardus Swartwout, Jan Tys, Peter Gimar, and David Jamison, and included "a certain quantity of land at a place called Maghaghkemek, being the quantity of one thousand two hundred acres; beginning at the western bounds of the lands called Nepe-neck, to a small run of water called by the Indian name Assawaghkemeck, and so along said run of water and the lands of Mansjoor the Indian."

The lands included in the two patents are situated in the valley of the Peenpack. It will be perceived that they are described in such a loose and imperfect manner as to make it impossible to fix any particular location for either of them, and the patentees seem to have considered them as "floating" patents, under which they were authorized to take possession of any unappropriated lands in any part of the valley. Indeed, in after-years, when it was necessary to make a partition of the Minisink Patent,—within the general bounds of which these two patents were included, but in which they were expressly excepted,—the commissioners appointed to make the partition found great difficulty in making a location of them. With respect to the patent to Codebec and others, they remark that "it contains no particular boundaries, but appears rather to be a description of a certain tract of country in which the 1200 acres were to be taken up at the election of the parties, which election having been made many years ago, and being evidenced by the actual possession of the parties, consists of five distinct small tracts." These five tracts lie along the Neversink River and the Basha's Kill, from near the Delaware River to within the bounds of the county of Sullivan, about the distance of eleven miles.

Of the seven patentees above named, Codebec and Gimar were Frenchmen, and according to a certificate then in the possession of Gimar, in the French language, they were in that country in the year 1685, in April, being about twenty years old. On leaving France they proceeded to England or Holland, where they remained a short time, and were to be supplied with funds within a certain period by their friends at home, and in the receipt of which they were disappointed. They then embarked for America, and landed somewhere in the State of Maryland. By this time their money was spent, and they were compelled to support themselves by manual labor,—a condition of things to which they had not been accustomed; yet with that sprightliness of character and spirit of accommodation which cheerfully bends to every condition of things, these individuals yielded with their usual grace to the necessity of the case. Their stay in Maryland was short, and they then emigrated to the State of New York, and either in the city, or in one of the counties on the east side of the Hudson, both connected themselves in marriage with the Swartwout family. These marriages doubtless led to the after-intimacy and association of these persons, and was the reason of their co-settlement in the county.

The Swartwouts were large men, of great bodily strength and courage, and well calculated to be pioneers in the settlement of a new country densely covered with woods and infested by the natives and ferocious wild animals.

These seven men are said to have come to this town in 1690,* but did not procure the patent of 1200 acres previously mentioned till the 14th of October, 1697. Tys and Jamison must have died soon after the location of the patent or emigrated elsewhere, for in the future history of this settlement we neither find them mentioned, nor any others of that name till long after the period we are speaking of. Within a few years after the settlement the patent fell into the hands of Peter Gumaer, Jacob Cuddeback, one of the Swartwouts, and Hermanus Van Inwegen, as the names are now written and as they will hereafter be given in the history of the town.

The land covered by the patent laid along the Neversink River and Basha's Kill, at and below their junction, and was very fertile. The grass which grew upon these river flats was coarse, and from four to six feet high, and called in Dutch reet grass. The flats are now much altered from what they were, being cut up by channels by the action of the river, and grown over with woods.

At this time the nearest settlement was in Mamakating Hollow, some twenty-five or thirty miles north, and about half-way to Esopus. Soon after these individuals settled on the patent others came in and located in the town, among whom were Peter Cuykendall, John Decker, William Cole, Solomon Davis, and a few others. In the nature of things, it is a laborious business to settle a new country, and this county was eminently so because it was wholly covered with large timber. The difficulties encountered by our Western immigrants at this day, owing to the nature of soil and timber, are not to be compared with those encountered in the settlement of this State. Here everything had to be done,—there was nothing ready or partially fitted to the hands of the settlers. Unless they brought implements with them from Europe they had to manufacture them, for they could not be purchased everywhere as now.

The plows of that day and those used at this locality were complicated in structure; they were nearly out of use in 1775, and may be thus described: the forward end of the beam rested on an axle-tree between a large and small wheel.* The large wheel ran in the furrow, and the small one on the unbroken sod, which made the axle horizontal.

Wheat and rye were cut by means of a knife or cutter about two feet long, fastened to a wooden handle, and similar to a hemp-hook, and then gathered up into sheaves with a small hook fastened also to a wood handle. With these two instruments, one man at the same time cut down and gathered it up. This was the universal practice at this settlement, and it continued till about 1760, when scythes and cradles began to be used. Cattle were housed as well as horses, and all fed on grain and straw, during the winter. Though threshing was done with the flail, much of it was trampled out by horses. The grain was cleaned by a large hand-fan made of willow rods. The first fanning-mill was brought into this part of the country by Peter Gumaer about 1750 or 1760.

The first wagons used here were made principally of wood. The wheels were not hooped with iron; the felloes were thick, and drove full of wood pins to make them durable. Sleds were shod with wood. The harness was manufactured of flax and tow, the collars and neck-straps wove of rope yarn, doubled and twisted, which the men of the family manufactured during the long winter evenings. The women were pleasantly employed around the large family hearth in spinning and reeling yarn.

The first settlers carried their wheat to Esopus to sell—a distance of fifty or sixty miles—over a road a great part of which must have been in very bad order, only about twenty miles of which were worked by the inhabitants of this settlement.† Such was one of the disadvantages under which these early settlers labored; but by industriously working their productive lands they surmounted them all, lived as well and grew as wealthy as the farmers of this day. For the first half-century the coarse grains were not cash articles, being used principally to feed cattle and fatten the hogs. Corn, prepared in various ways, was used with milk for the morning and evening meal before tea and coffee came into general use, which was little before 1800 in that locality. Tea was first introduced here about 1760 or 1770, probably soon after the French war, for when the Revolution cut off the supply the inhabitants thought it very hard to be deprived of its use. Wheat was the great crop, and the first attempt to grind it was made by Jacob Codebeck with a very small mill. One of the stones with which the experiment was made—about two feet in diameter and three inches thick—is still to be seen in the cellar of Peter E. Gumaer, of this town, near where the ancient mill stood. It was erected on a spring brook near his house, but how it answered the purpose is not now known. Though uninformed of the date of this erection, it must have been the first of the kind in this county. There were two other grist-mills erected in this vicinity, on what was called "Old Dam Brook," one at and the other below the outlet of a swamp and bog meadow,—so long since that no one of the last generation saw their remains, except the ground and stones which composed a part of the dam of one of them. One of them was at the northwest side of the road, three-fourths of a mile northeast of Port Jervis; the other lower down on the brook. Jacob R. DeWitt built a mill about the year 1770 on the Neversink River, near Cuddebackville, which continued to grind till sold to the Canal Company.

There was also an old mill erected by Solomon Davis,—the site in later years was occupied by one owned by Mr. Thomas Van Etten,—and another by Simon Westfall, the site of which was subsequently occupied by Mr. Bennet's mill. There was still another old mill near Butler's Falls.

Judging from the sawed materials in old buildings, saw-mills must have been in very early use in this neighborhood. One is known to have been erected about 1760 or 1770.

The first grist-mills performed the operation of grinding only. The bolting was performed by hand-sifting, before the flour was converted into bread. This process took out the coarse bran, and every family kept a sieve for the purpose. This flour made the real healthy Graham brown bread.

It is proper to mention at this point that there are traditions of still earlier settlement which deserve notice, and which seem to rest mostly upon letters written by Samuel Preston, of Stockport, Pa., in 1828. Mr. Preston had been employed in his youth as a surveyor, and soon after the close of the Revolution executed an engagement in Northampton Co., Pa. In his account of the work and the region of country, he states that he received from John Lukens, surveyor-general of Pennsylvania, an account of the early settlement. The recollections of Lukens extended back to 1730, when, as an apprentice, he had carried chain and learned surveying of Nicholas Scull, the famous surveyor of early times. In exploring the Minisink country they found a fine orchard larger than any near Philadelphia. This was owned by Samuel Depuis. Depuis drew his wheat and cider to Kingston, about a hundred miles, over the "Mine road," and brought back salt and other necessities.

Nearly sixty years later, as the tradition asserts, at the Preston expedition of 1787, they met Nicholas Dupuis, the son of Samuel, living in a spacious stone house in great plenty and affluence, who confirmed the previous traditions. These are the authorities which are claimed to indicate early settlement, while the country was still in possession of the Dutch, prior, therefore, to 1664. Mines are said to have been opened at two points,—“one on the Delaware, where the mountain nearly approaches the lower point of Pahaquarry Flat; the other at the north foot of the same mountain, near half-way from the Delaware to Esopus.” The tradition implies that the mining and the settlement were abandoned in 1664 at the English conquest.

It is evident that these traditions relate to territory beyond the present limits of Orange County, and that they prove little or nothing with reference to the towns to which this present history is devoted. The “mines” were opened at some very early date, as compared with the time of general settlement. The “Mine road” was an early work, but there is no proof that either were in existence before the Dutch surrender in 1664. Even the interview of Lukens with Samuel Depuis* in 1730, affords no indication of a settlement having existed for seventy or eighty years previously. Thirty years or forty years, carrying the date of settlement back even to 1690, would have afforded ample time for the growth of an excellent orchard, the production of considerable cider, and the growth of abundant crops of wheat.

The address of Benjamin B. Edsall, Esq., at the first Sussex centenary, Oct. 6, 1853, presses definitely this claim of early settlement in behalf of the lower Minisink, twelve miles from Carpenter’s Point.

As this is now beyond the bounds of New York, it is not perhaps a necessary part of our work to throw doubt upon this claim; but as the same claim is made for the Peenpack Valley (as above shown), we can hardly avoid again remarking that there is no basis for either. It is true the Dutch built a fort at Rondout in 1614, but the settlement of Kingston (Old Wiltwyck) was not made until 1657. It was in the second Esopus war, 1663, that the New Paltz region east of the Shawangunk Mountains was “discovered,” and later than that before a settlement was made there. True, this would not exclude the idea of settlements on the west side of the mountains through the Rondout Valley, and so farther south to the Mamakating. But it was not until 1669 that a few emigrants ventured out upon this line as far as Marbletown, and ten or fifteen years later before any located at Rochester.

The paper of Capt. Arent Schuyler, already quoted, giving account of his visit to this country in 1694, makes no allusion to any white settlers whatever. The Preston letters, containing the account of interviews with Samuel Depuy in 1630 and Nicholas Depuy in 1687, seem to have been the only evidence which previous writers had in favor of this early settlement of the Minisink region. The suggestions above given prove this story of settlement in 1650 to 1660 wholly a myth. Whether Cuddeback, Gumaer, and their associates were in the Peenpack Valley in 1790 is not settled by Arent Schuyler’s letters of 1794, for he might not have penetrated as far north; yet it may be presumed Schuyler would have heard of them and mentioned them if there had been a settlement. Inquiry among the descendants fails to find any one positive as to the date of this settlement, yet Dr. C. E. Cuddeback, of Port Jervis, has in his possession certain memoranda in the shape of petitions to the colonial government to be protected in their title, one dated in 1797 the other in 1799. The graves in the old Gumaer burial-place are very old, one bearing date 1713. The evidence, then, entirely disproves any claim to settlement in 1650. That the Minisink region was settled in 1650 (even the New Jersey part of it) is impossible from any documents now existing.

To a certain extent the settlement of Deerpark must be considered a portion of the history of all the Minisink region, especially all that part of it which relates to the controversies between the settlers on the Minisink and Wawayanda Patents with the people in New Jersey about the possession of the lands along the disputed line. The settlement must have been very early, and to some extent before 1700, for settlements were made by inhabitants of New Jersey north of that, and complaints against them brought before the Colonial Assembly for their direction as early as that period.

This border warfare was long and tedious, as already shown. In 1755 a bill was passed “to empower certain trustees to dispose of any quantity of unappropriated lands within the patents of Minisink and Wawayanda to raise a sum, not exceeding £1000 on each, to defend the title and possessions of the proprietors of the patents against the encroachments of the people of East New Jersey, and to defray the expense already accrued thereon.”

From records elsewhere given (ante, p. 20), it appears that in 1714 the following were the only freeholders in Maghaghkemek, viz., Thomas Swartwout, Harmon Barentsen, Jacob Cuddeback, Peter Gumaer, and Jacobus Swartwout. In 1728 they are recorded as Harmon Barentsen Van Inwegen, Peter Gumaer, John Van Vliet, Jr., Samuel Swartwout, Bernardus

* Samuel Depuis lived on the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware River, about thirty-eight miles below Port Jervis, and three miles north of the Water Gap. (See ante, p. 15.)

Swartwout, Jr., and Jacob Cuddeback. If the settlement by Cuddeback and Gumaer commenced in 1690, this record shows a very small increase in the number of freeholders in thirty-eight years.

ASSESSMENT ROLL OF 1775.

As showing the names of families residing in the "lower neighborhood" at the opening of the Revolution, we are fortunately able to give the following assessment-roll for district No. 3 in the old precinct of Goshen. The general records of Goshen having been destroyed (in some respects an irretrievable loss), this roll is the best authority extant.

District No. 3 evidently consisted of the triangle bounded north by the "old county line," easterly by the Shawangunk Mountains, and southwesterly by the Delaware River,—in other words, the southern portion of Deerpark, comprising the present territory of Port Jervis and its vicinity. An assessment-roll is better or more complete authority than many other lists of names. Taxes are not supposed to omit any property-holder, and an examination of this assessment shows that men without families or homesteads must have been assessed, for in one instance the appraisal is less than two shillings, and others are named at very small amounts. The assessor was Abraham Van Auken, an old and well-known name in this section.

"The above is a list of my assessment of all the inhabitants in my said district.

"Given under my hand, September, 1775.

"ABRAHAM C. VAN AUKEN, Assessor."

The names attached to the Revolutionary Articles of Association for the Minisink region may be presumed to apply to the same territory as the assessment-roll,—south of the old county line in Deerpark,—and at the same date. (See list in General History.)

The list for Mamakating, given in the General History, shows the names of those living north of the old county line, and includes a part of what is now Sullivan County. We add brief notes upon the location of a few of the early settlers mentioned in the above papers, and upon various names and places.

PENHAUSEN'S LANDT, or PENHAUSEN'S LAND.—This was the name of an Indian chief who in former times resided near the present residence of Levi Van Eten, Esq., on the rich bottom-lands in that neighborhood. In old times, when speaking of a good piece of land, it was common to compare it with Penhausen's Land.

SENEYAUGHQUAN was an Indian name of the place where Maj. Swartwout in his time resided,—the residence in later years of Col. Peter Swartwout.

SOKAPACK.—This is also an Indian name of a place in this town, which is understood to be significant of a spring of water.

LOWER NEIGHBORHOOD.—In respect to the first settlers of the "lower neighborhood," it may be said generally that they were contemporary with the children of the first settlers at Peenpack, and three of them had married daughters of those first settlers. The children of Peter Gumaer, the great-grandfather of Peter E. Gumaer, were six in number, and born between the years 1693 and 1708; from which it appears the lower neighborhood must have been settled between the years 1710 and 1725.

DEWITT FAMILY.—The DeWitt family of Deerpark were descendants of Tjerck Claessen DeWitt, who was born in Grootholt, in Sunderlant, Holland, and who after his immigration settled at Wiltwyck, now Kingston, in 1672. His children were: 1, Andries; 2, Tjerck; 3, Jan; 4, Jacob; 5, Lucas; 6, Peek; 7, Tjaatje; 8, Janetje; 9, Gertrung; 10, Rachel; 11, Marietje; 12, Anglie. Egbert, son of Andries (1), and grandson of Tjerck (1), had nine sons and one daughter, viz.: 1, Dr. Andries, who lived and died at New Paltz; 2, Jacob Rutzen, who settled in the Peenpack neighborhood, and whose daughter Rachel married Robert Burnet, of New Windsor; 3, William; 4, John; 5, Stephen; 6, Mary (Polly), who married Capt. (afterwards Gen.) James Clinton, of New Windsor, and became the mother of DeWitt Clinton; 7, Egbert; 8, Thomas; 9, Benjamin; 10, Reuben. Simon DeWitt, for many years surveyor-general of the State, was the son of Dr. Andries of New Paltz.

Jacob R. DeWitt's oldest son was Moses DeWitt; in person large and well favored, very social and agreeable in his manner and conversation. The Indians esteemed him highly, and when he died deeply lamented his death. This speaks a thousand facts in his favor, for one man like this in a new settlement, surrounded by Indians liable to be excited and provoked to revenge and murder by the least and unintended injury, was like a garment to the settlement which covered up a multitude of their offenses against them. This young man obtained his education from an individual by the name of Thomas White, an Englishman, who came to the neighborhood about the beginning of the war. A mutual attachment grew up between him and the people, and during the period of hostilities he took shelter, with his wife, in Fort Gumaer to abide the result. As the condition of things in the settlement and state of the country justified it, he kept school in a small house built for the purpose near the fort. What DeWitt failed to learn here he afterwards accomplished in the family of Gen. Clinton.

Peter E. Gumaer, Esq., in the winter of 1787 studied surveying with Mr. DeWitt, who during the previous summer had been out on the line then being run to divide the States of New York and Pennsylvania.

Of the early settlers the following statement with respect to their location is upon the authority of the "Gumaer manuscript,"* written by Peter E. Gumaer, father of Peter L. Gumaer. Peter Gumaer located at the southwest end of the hill, on the well-known Peter E. Gumaer farm, near Cuddebackville.

Jan Tyse located between that and the Spring Brook. It may be proper to remark, however, that it is not probable that he ever occupied this place. It is supposed that his claim was very early sold to others.

Barnardus Swartwout settled on the east side of the hill, a few rods west of this spring, and the cavity of the cellar was visible in late years.

Jacob Cuddeback's homestead was a few rods northeast of the northeast end of the hill, on the low ground, and the site of his dwelling could be determined by the cavity of the old cellar within a few years, if not at the present time.

Anthony Swartwout located a few rods northeast of Cuddeback's, "where the house formerly of Cornelius Van Inwegen stood."

* "The Gumaer manuscript" was written evidently at various periods of his life, brought down, however, to about the year 1861. It consists of about three hundred pages of foolscap. It is very largely a history of families, and families whose names are frequent in all this section to-day. One might suppose they would promptly subscribe any necessary amount to secure its publication. Mr. Gumaer was a teacher, a surveyor, a farmer, and an author. He published a small work upon astronomy. He surveyed and mapped at one time or another nearly all of the lands in the town, and did most of the legal writing for many years. It is said that no legal paper written by him was ever broken in a court of law.

No man was more competent than he to judge of early traditions, so far as the evidence was before him. He was familiar with both the Dutch and English languages, and it is said that in his youth he understood the sermon so well that on returning from church he could sometimes scarcely remember which language the preacher had used.

He had four sons,—Peter L., Ezekiel, Andrew Jackson, and Jacob. A current baptismal story is worth repeating. He had preferred to name the third son, above mentioned, Henry Clay, but his wife desired a solid Democratic name. It is not supposed there was any very serious dispute: she consented to his view. At the altar, when the minister asked for the name, he hesitated a moment, in his usual habit of speaking with careful deliberation, when his wife opportunely said "Andrew Jackson," and the minister (joining in this Democratic conspiracy) quickly baptized with that name.

Mr. Gumaer, in his manuscript, speaking of the Cuddeback settlement, uses this language: "In the year 1690, as near as can now be determined," etc. Again, "After these early settlers had resided here a few years they sent Jacob Cuddeback, one of their number, to the Governor of the New York colony to ask for a patent, which was granted Oct. 14, 1797."

David Jameson's place was also somewhere near the others, in the same group, though it must also be said of him that it is uncertain whether he actually settled; neither his name nor that of Tyse appear in subsequent annals.

Jacob Cuddeback was a French Huguenot. His name was originally spelled Caudeback, and there is a city of that name in France from which he came. It was a place of 9000 inhabitants in 1685. His wife was Margaret Provost, whom he married at Esopus or elsewhere along the Hudson. The pioneer lived to be nearly one hundred years old. His children were: 1, Benjamin, who never married. He lived to be eighty years of age, spending his life in this town. 2, William, who married Jemima Elting and settled on the old homestead. A majority of the Cuddeback families of the present time in this vicinity are his descendants. His children were James, Abram, Benjamin, Roolif, Sarah. 3, James, who married Neelje Decker. He lived near Deckertown, N. J. He died at the age of thirty, but left children, whose descendants are quite numerous in Niagara Co., N. Y. 4, Abraham, who lived to be about eighty. His wife was Esther Swartwout. He spent most of his life in this town, but in old age moved to Skaneateles, where his children had previously settled. 5, Dinah, who married Abraham Lovis, of Rochester, and settled in New Jersey. 6, Eleanor, who married Evert Hornbeck, of Rochester, and lived where Mrs. Joseph Cuddeback now resides. 7, Elsie, who married Harmanus Van Gordon, and lived at the Flat Rocks, in New Jersey. 8, Morice, who married George Westfall, and lived in New Jersey. 9, Naomi, who married Lodewyck Hornbeck, of Rochester.

Peter Gumaer, the pioneer, married Esther Hasbrouck, of Kingston. His children were Hannah, who married James Swartwout; Esther, who married Samuel Swartwout; another who married a DuBois, and there was a fourth daughter, Rachel. He had only one son, Peter, who married Charity DeWitt, and left two sons,—Peter and Ezekiel. Peter E. Gumaer, the author of the manuscript history alluded to, was a son of Ezekiel.

Harmanus Van Inwegen, whose location does not seem to be definitely known by his descendants, married a Swartwout. There was at least one son, Gerardus Van Inwegen, and one daughter, Hannah, who married Thomas Decker.

It is understood that the Swartwout pioneers were three brothers,—Anthony, Barnardus, and Samuel. The children of Anthony were Samuel, who married Esther Gumaer; James, who married Anna Gumaer; and Anna, who married John Van Vleet.

These early settlers located on and around the hill as described above, for mutual protection and defense, and because of the valuable spring of water near.

Soon after the settlement of the seven, or more properly the five, the patent passed into the possession of three,—Anthony Swartwout, Peter Gumaer, Jacob

Cuddeback. Their more permanent homesteads after that were as follows :

Swartwout built near the Spring Brook, where Peter P. Swartwout now resides. Gumaer built where the old stone house now stands, on the Godfroy property; Cuddeback where an old stone house now stands on the main road south of Port Clinton.

Simon Westfall lived in the old stone house, now the Hazen property, at Carpenter's Point. His children were Wilhelmus, John D., Reuben, Simon. Most of the families of that name in this vicinity are understood to be descendants of the last named.

The limits of this work prevent giving these family notes beyond this small group of actual pioneers. In the several papers given in this chapter—the assessment-rolls, and other documents—nearly every settler preceding the Revolution is included.

The amount of the tax in one of the two districts of Mamakating precinct for 1792 was fifteen pounds and sixpence, equal to $37.56. Peter E. Gumaer, the collector, traveled on foot over his district, comprising an immense territory now in Deerpark, Mount Hope, Mamakating, Forestburgh, Highland, Lumberland, and Cohecton.

FAMILIES IN SOUTHERN DEERPARK, 1810 TO 1815.

From the Minisink record of school districts we find district No. 20 as it was formed in 1813. It included the families of James Sawyer, Benjamin Carpenter, Reuben Westfall, John Corwin, Isaac Van Strander, Samuel Lambert, James Van Fleet, Jr., Nathan Van Auken, Jeremiah Van Auken, Joshua Van Auken, Daniel Van Auken, James Van Fleet, Levi Van Etten, Levi Van Etten, Jr., Jacob W. Van Etten, Henry Van Etten, Jacob Westbrook, Jr., Widow Sarah Decker. This was in the southern part of the present town of Deerpark, as that remained a portion of Minisink until 1825.

District 22, "added to Deerpark," included the following families, viz.: those of Joel Whitlock, Peter Swartwout, Widow Esther Hombert, Martin Carpenter, John Van Fleet, Solomon Decker. These families must have been just south of the old county line to be added to a district in Deerpark, as Deerpark then only extended south to that line.

School district No. 21 of Minisink, as organized in 1813, included the following families, viz.: those of Cornelius W. Cole, Wilhelmus Cole, Josias Cole, Thomas Chattle, Hezekiah Fredenburgh, Elias Coykendall, Daniel Roberts, Richard Decker, Samuel Caskey, Martin Caskey, William Little, Simon Westfall, Benjamin Westfall, Benjamin Van Inwegen, Lewis Lambert, William Lambert, John Caskey, Robert Caskey, John Wood, Samuel Caskey, Jr., Joseph Patterson, Martin Decker, John Skinner, Roman Elmdorph, George Quick, Peter Howey, Benjamin Cuddeback, Isaac Decker, Nathan Van Auken, Jr. The above was evidently the school district at the present place of Port Jervis and vicinity.

EARLY PHYSICIANS.

The first physician here of which any trace can be found was Dr. Chattle, who lived about half a mile north of Carpenter's Point; practiced here many years; died here; must have been here soon after 1800. After his death there was no physician in the valley until the time of the building of the canal. Drs. Van Dusen and Hornbeck, from Montague, N. J., Dr. Newkirk, of Mount Hope, Dr. Loomis, of Otisville, all practiced through the valley. Dr. Charles Hardenberg came here about 1826. For a long time he was the only physician here; occasionally one would come, but their stay was short generally. Among these were Dr. Hart, a young man, who practiced with Dr. Hardenberg a few months. Dr. Rafferty, a school-teacher, also practiced some in the neighborhood. Dr. Ira Dales came here in 1848, remained about five years, when he removed to Joliet, Ill. Dr. C. M. Lawrence (homœopath) came here in 1850; is still practicing here. Dr. Thomas Walsh came here in 1851; is still practicing here. Dr. Dufrene, a Frenchman, well educated, came here in 1851, and died here. After these came Dr. Jerow and Dr. David Robertson. In 1854, Dr. Benjamin W. Carpenter located here; practiced till he died in 1863. Dr. Sol. Van Etten located here in 1855; still here. Dr. H. Hardenberg in 1860; still here. Dr. D. W. Cooper in 1863; remained till about 1870. Dr. Marsh came here in 1863; died in 1867. Dr. I. S. Hunt came in 1865; died in 1875. Dr. Lamb came here in 1866; remained about one year. Dr. M. E. Jones came here in 1867; remained a few years.

There is now a medical society here. Physicians from surrounding places meet with the resident physicians on the second Wednesday of January, April, July, and October of each year for discussion of medical subjects and to promote the best interests of the profession. Officers at present are: President, Dr. J. L. Whittaker, of Unionville, N. J.; Vice-President, Dr. T. D. Wills, of Port Jervis; Treasurer, Dr. H. Hardenberg, of Port Jervis; Secretary, Dr. W. S. Cuddeback, of Port Jervis.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

The earliest civil relation of the territory of the present town of Deerpark is intimated, but not very clearly defined, in an act of the Legislature, passed Oct. 18, 1701, in which it was provided that the people "of Wagachemeck and Great and Little Minisink" were empowered to give their votes in the county of Ulster. This would imply that they were beyond the border of Ulster County, for if they had been within no enabling act would have been necessary. This "Wagachemeck" was the territory now known as Cuddebackville and vicinity, but with just what limits is not stated in the old documents.

The act of Nov. 12, 1709, fixed more closely the boundaries of the counties, and definitely declared Wagachemeck a part of Ulster County. The "old county line" extended beyond the Shawangunk Mountains, crossed Deerpark, just south of Huguenot, and intersected the Delaware at Sparrowbush. This would appear to have bounded the old district of Wagachemeck on the south.

Not far from the same time there was by order of court, it is supposed, a more formal organization of this same territory under a different name,—Maghaghkemek. Under this name and organization the territory remained until 1743, when the precinct of Mamakating was erected, which became the successor of Machackemeck.

The precinct of Mamakating continued until 1798, when the town of Deerpark was erected. To recapitulate, we have three preceding organizations: 1st. The indefinite district of Wagachemeck alluded to in the statute of 1701. 2d. The more formally organized precinct of Machackemeck of 1709-10. 3d. The precinct of Mamakating, organized in 1743. At the formation of this, the first precinct-meeting was directed to be held at the house of Samuel Swartwout. Its territory was declared to consist of "all the land to the southward of the town of Rochester as far as the county of Ulster extends, and to the westward of the precincts of Wallkill and Shawangunk."

Some doubt has arisen over the term "precinct of Minisink," as it has been thought to cover, in part at least, the same territory as the precinct organizations just mentioned. The name Minisink was applied in the early documents to the settlements of Maghaghkemek and to those of Big and Little Minisink;* but there are clear evidences that besides the indefinite region, Minisink, there was also a "precinct Minisink," with collectors, assessors, and other officers. This is rendered certain by a document recently discovered among the papers of Benjamin Van Vleet, being a warrant for the collection of a tax in the precinct of Minisink. In 1737 an act of Assembly was passed authorizing the erection of a "court-house and goal at Goshen," and the warrant quoted was for the portion levied on the Minisink people. The following is a verbatim copy of the warrant:

"Orange county ss.

Pursuant to an Act of the General Assembly of this Colony of New York entitled an Act to Enable the Justices of the Peace in that part of Orange County lying to the Northward of the Highlands to build a Court House & Goal for the Said County at Goshen.

On the back of the warrant is the following return:

"Received of John Decker Collector of Minnicinck the full contents of this within tax warrant I say Recd pr. me Collector fees first being deducted that is ninepence pr. £.

"JOHN HOLLY, Com.

"June ye 30, 1739."

The question arises, then, Where was the precinct of Minisink? The date is very early—1739. The precinct organizations of Wagachameck, 1701, Machackameck, 1709, and Mamakating, 1743, extended south to the old county line; but none of them south of that line. The precinct of Goshen had for its north boundary the same "old county line," extending from Plum Point, on the Hudson, to what is now Sparrowbush, on the Delaware. We know from the assessment-roll of 1775 that the triangular portions of the present town of Deerpark, south of the old county line, was in Goshen Precinct. Now the claim of New York extended south to the lower end of Great Minisink Island. The limits of Goshen Precinct were not stretched southward to include this disputed territory, but there was erected the Minisink Precinct along the Delaware, below what was afterwards known as Carpenter's Point. The signatures to the warrant given above do not prove that "Minisink Precinct" included any part of the present territory of Deerpark. The signatures are simply those of the county officials directing the collecting of the tax in the precinct of Minisink.†

The town of Deerpark was organized in 1798. The three early organizations given above were north of the old county line, at least nominally. The territory now in Deerpark, south of the old county line, comprising Port Jervis and its vicinity, was a part of the town of Minisink from 1789 to 1825, and much interesting material relating to this section may be found in the chapter upon that town.

† Perhaps this conclusion must not be considered settled without further investigation. When the statute of 1701 enumerates "Mackhackameck" Great and Little Minisink, it seems at the first view to have left out the "lower neighborhood" between Huguenot and Carpenter's Point, but the term Mackhackameck then applied to all the settlement in the valley above Carpenter's Point. When a few years later the old county line was run, and its location definitely known, Mackhackameck was limited by that line on the south, and the Goshen Precinct covered the territory south of that line to Carpenter's Point.

* The settlement of Great Minisink was near the Great Minisink Island, twelve miles below Carpenter's Point, and little Minisink near the Little Island between Carpenter's Point and the Great Island.

It is not known that any records of the early precincts remain. At least none such have come down to the clerk's office of the present town of Deerpark. From other sources we have the following:

At the town-meeting of Mamakating Precinct for April 5, 1774, the following officers were chosen: Supervisor, Benjamin Dupuy; Clerk, Thomas Kyte; Constable and Collector, Jacob Stanton; Assessors, Harmanus Van Inwegen, Abraham Cuddeback, Jr. Overseers of the Highways: First District, Benjamin Cuddeback; Second District, Dick V. K. Westbrook; Third District, Jacob Devins; Fourth District, Robert Cook; Fifth District, Ezekiel Travis; Sixth District, Abraham Smedis. Overseers of the Poor, Philip Swartwout, Robert Cook; Fence-keepers, Benjamin Depuy, Jacob Stanton; Stallion-viewers, Vail Wheeler, Abraham Cuddeback; Pound-keepers, Vail Wheeler, Benjamin Depuy.

Philip Swartwout was supervisor in 1776; Benjamin Depuy in 1778 and 1782; Jacob R. DeWitt in 1873; Benjamin Depuy again in 1784 and 1787; Peter Cuddeback, 1788.

The town of Deerpark having been erected in 1798, we have the following record of the first town-meeting:

"Record of the proceedings of the freeholders in the town of Deerpark at the first town-meeting held in said town, at the house of Elisha Reeve, Esq., on the 3d day of April, 1798.

"List of town officers: William Denn, town clerk; James Finch, Jr., supervisor: — Seybolt, — Rose, Joseph Smith, assessors; Peter Gumaer, Jr., collector; Benjamin Dupuy, Elisha Reeve, overseers of the poor; — Reeve, James Finch, Sr., Wm. "WILLIAM DENN,
"WILLIAM YOUNG,
"JOSEPH TUTHILL,
"ELIAS GUMAER, Inspectors."

SLAVES.

As in other towns there are a few entries, required by law, recording the birth of slaves,—somewhat of an interesting fact to the youth of the present generation who may scarcely have read that New York was once a slaveholding State.

We give several of the earliest:

"This may certify that Flora, daughter of Elizabeth, servant of the subscriber, was born 31st of July, 1800.

"HARMANUS VAN INWEGEN, Farmer.

"DEERPARK, 7th April, 1800."

"This may certify that Harry, son of Jin, servant of the subscriber, was born the fifth day of November, in the year 1800.

"EZEKIEL GUMAER, Farmer.

"DEERPARK, April 7, 1801."

"This may certify that Simon, son of Suffi, servant of the subscriber, was born the twenty-third day of July, in the year 1800.

"BENJAMIN DEPUY, Farmer.

"DEERPARK, April 7, 1801."

"This may certify that Cate, daughter of Jin, slave of the subscriber, was born the 6th day of July, in the year 1802.

"JAMES KETCHUM, Farmer.

"DEERPARK, March 30, 1803."

To manumit a slave required the certificate of the overseers of the poor.

Under date of Jan. 22, 1803, Jacobus Swartwout and David Corwin, overseers of the poor, certify that "Susanna, a negro woman slave of Mary Rose, widow of the late Capt. William Rose, appears to be under the age of fifty years, and of sufficient ability to provide for herself."

The latest birth of a slave child recorded seems to be the following:

"Josiah Van Inwegen, of the town of Deerpark, in the County of Orange, being duly sworn, deposes and saith, that to the best of his knowledge and belief, Sam the son of Mary, slave to the said Josiah Van Inwegen, was born the 29th day of July, in the year 1817.

"JOSIAH VAN INWEGEN.

"Subscribed & sworn the 24th day of August, 1819."

ASSESSMENT-ROLL OF 1825.

This is the earliest now preserved in the town clerk's office, and was made by Benjamin Cuddeback, Philip Swartwout, and William Cuddeback, assessors. This is the first roll made after the division of the towns, and the erection of Deerpark with its present territory. Persons assessed for $2000 or over were William Cuddeback, $5050; Henry Cuddeback, $2323; Cornelius Cuddeback, $4033; Jacob Cuddeback, $3824; Benjamin Cuddeback, $2000; Cornelius Cole, $2549; Isaac Decker, Jr., $2341; Peter Gumaer, Jr., $3114; Peter E. Gumaer, $6330; Gerardus Gumaer, $3153; Francis Kelly, $2038; James D. Swartwout, $3650; Stephen St. John, $2131; Jacobus Swartwout, $3352; Levi Van Etten, $5859; Margaret Van Fleet, $2243. The total assessed valuation was $114,820, and the tax levied upon that, $227.63.

The following are the justices of the peace who presided at town-meetings, with the dates at which their names first appear in the records as so presiding:

* The road-masters' names attached above are for the year 1800, and the districts as described must be north of the "old county line," as the territory south of that belonged to Minisink until 1825.

1812, Wm. Young, Jr.; 1813, James Finch, Jr.; 1824, Richard Penny, Isaac Otis; 1825, Joseph Chattle, Richard Penny presided at the organization of the town of Calhoun, afterwards Mount Hope; Abraham Cuddeback, Thomas Van Etten; 1828, Abraham Cuddeback, Benjamin Cuddeback, James D. Swartwout; 1829, Levi Van Etten.

The justices of the peace elected at the annual town-meetings were as follows:

1830, Solomon Van Etten; 1831 (no election of justice recorded); 1832, David Decker, Abraham Cuddeback; 1833, Cornelius Gray; 1834, Charles C. Boyd; 1835, Jeremiah Gumaer; 1836, David Decker, Wm. Cuddeback; 1837, Cornelius Gray; 1838, Abraham J. Cuddeback; 1839, William Cuddeback; 1840, David Decker; 1841, Cornelius Gray, Charles C. Boyd; 1842, Abraham J. Cuddeback; 1843, James H. Taylor, Abraham J. Cuddeback;* 1844, Samuel W. Jackson; 1845, Eli Van Inwegen; 1846, Abraham J. Cuddeback; 1847, Alexander Gordon; 1848, John Caskey; 1849, James Bennett; 1850, Abraham J. Cuddeback; 1851, James Cuddeback, Jr.; 1852, Francis Marvin; 1853, John Caskey; 1854, Wilhelmus Westbrook; 1855, John M. Helter, John J. Bross; 1856, Wm. H. Newkirk; 1857, Lucas F. Hough, Henry H. Stewart; 1858, Peter P. Swartwout; 1859, Henry H. Stewart, James N. Penny; 1860, Wm. H. Newkirk; 1861, John J. Bross; 1862, James N. Penny; 1863, Lucas F. Hough, William Westfall; 1864, William Rankin; 1865, Daniel C. Hazen; 1866, James N. Penny; 1867, George Clauson (also to fill vacancy); 1868, Benaiah Rhodes; 1869, Joseph L. Potter; 1870, Henry Dutcher; 1871, Daniel Holbrook; 1872, John Van Etten, Jr., Norman W. Mulley (also to fill vacancy); 1873, Norman W. Mulley, Moses L. Cole; 1874, William E. McCormick; 1875, Dayton T. Cox; 1876, Moses L. Cole; 1877, Daniel C. Hazen; 1878, Daniel Holbrook, Wm. Norris; 1879, Dayton T. Cox, Moses L. Cole;† 1880, Moses L. Cole.

BONDING OF THE TOWN OF DEERPARK.

This was effected by papers recorded in the office of the county clerk, and bearing date May 16, 1868. The consent of the tax-payers, as expressed in the instrument, was verified by the affidavit of Aaron Decker and others. The bonds were to be issued in aid of the Monticello Branch Railroad, to extend from Port Jervis to Monticello, in Sullivan County, through the towns of Deerpark, Thompson, and Forestburgh. The amount of bonds was to be $200,000. These bonds were issued to run thirty years.

V.—VILLAGES.

PORT JERVIS.

This village dates from 1826, when the Delaware and Hudson Canal became a certainty. It is named in honor of the engineer who superintended the construction of the canal. As late as 1846, a writer said of Port Jervis, "A small village on the canal, where it first approaches the Delaware. It is just above Carpenter's Point and the junction of the Neversink and the Delaware."

He added, however, another paragraph, in which he said,—

"The small flourishing village of Port Jervis through which this canal passes had its origin at the commencement of the navigation thereat, and owes its population to that work. There are now five stores and groceries in this village; three taverns, in spacious buildings; one three-story grist-mill, built by Dr. Ball, of Brooklyn, being a stone building, and has four run of stone in it; three churches,—a Dutch Reformed, a Baptist, and a Methodist church, and one large school-house. The different branches of mechanical country business are also carried on. A considerable amount of lumber is brought in and sold. Coal is deposited and sold. A mail route from Kingston, in Ulster County, to Milford, in Pennsylvania, and thence to the city of Philadelphia, passes through this village and crosses the Delaware at about half a mile distant. The Neversink bridge place is about one mile southerly of Port Jervis; Huguenot about four, and Cuddebackville about eight miles northeast. These are small places, the two latter on the canal and mail route."

The "little village" of 1846, with its five stores, has grown rapidly to its present proportions. The "stores" are over 100 in number. Other business places are correspondingly increased, until a "Directory" must be consulted instead of a history to obtain an idea of the development of thirty-four years.

PORT JERVIS POST-OFFICE.

Previous to the opening of the Delaware and Hudson Canal, in 1828, the post-office for this section was at Carpenter's Point. The last postmaster at that place was Frank Kelly. About 1829 the office was removed to Port Jervis, and John Slauson (father of Erastus Slauson) was the first postmaster. He kept it at his hotel, at what is now the corner of Main Street and the Huguenot road. This was under Jackson's first administration. The second postmaster was Dr. John Conkling, who was appointed in 1833, under Gen. Jackson in his second term, Amos Kendall, Postmaster-General. The office was removed to the storehouse of Dodge, St. John & Co., near the canal on Main Street. Dr. Conkling held the office from 1833 to 1845, and served under the administrations of Jackson, Van Buren, Harrison, and Tyler. In 1845, under the administration of President Polk, Dr. Charles Hardenburgh was appointed postmaster, and kept the office in his drug-store, on the site of the present parsonage of the Reformed Church. During this same administration Dr. Hardenburgh was removed, and Mr. Lyon appointed. June 21, 1849, Dr. John Conkling again received the appointment, and removed the office in a wheelbarrow to the building on Main Street recently used as a glove-factory. In May, 1851, Dr. Conkling resigned in favor of Francis Marvin, who held the office until the inauguration of President Pierce's administration. In 1853, Mr. Marvin was succeeded by Thomas J. Lyon, and he in turn was followed, in February, 1855, by James Van Fleet. Under him the office was removed "down town," corner of Pike Street and Jersey Avenue. In 1857, George Broadhead was appointed postmaster under Buchanan's administration. The office was kept corner of Pike and Ball Streets. In 1861, under President Lincoln, Augustus B. Goodale was named as the incumbent, and the office was moved "up town" to its present location. Mr. Goodale held the office until 1879, when Charles St. John, Jr., editor of the Port Jervis Union, was appointed, and is the present postmaster. During Mr. Goodale's term the present brick building was erected, and the portion used for the post-office rented to the government for ten years.

* The latter must have failed to qualify, in 1842.

† He had failed to qualify under his election of 1876, and had served by appointment.

INCORPORATION.

Under date of July 20, 1853, application for incorporation was made to the Court of Sessions by a petition signed by C. N. Lawrence, Nathaniel Van Tuyl, Orville J. Brown, Samuel H. Mills, and J. A. Jennings. The application was accompanied by the necessary survey and certificates of election. The publication of the requisite notice was verified by John Dow and A. G. Tucker. The inspectors of election were Thomas Van Ellen, James Van Fleet, and Abram Swartwout.

The order of the court bears date May 13, 1853. The first election was held Aug. 9, 1853. The charter was revised in 1866, and again in 1867. The first resolutions submitted to the vote of the people, in accordance with law, soon after the incorporation, were for the following purposes:

For building a pound.....	$100
For streets and sidewalks.....	200
For surveying and other expenses.....	350
For printing and incidentals.....	300
Total.....	$1350

The resolutions were adopted.

The sums for 1880-81, placed in contrast, tell something of the progress in improvements as well as in expenses:

For general expenses.....	$3025
For the pay of officials.....	3500
For the water fund.....	1850
For gas-lamps.....	2200
For naphtha-lamps.....	2425
Total.....	$13,000

Streets and other expenses carry the sum up to $17,000 or $18,000.

The following list shows the full board of trustees each year, also the president, clerk, and treasurer. The election of the first president does not appear in the minutes, but it is believed to be correctly given:

- Aug. 9, 1853.—Samuel Fowler, president; Charles St. John, Daniel Romaine, W. H. Powers, O. J. Brown. S. M. Godfrey, clerk; C. T. King, treasurer.
- May 9, 1854.—W. H. Powers, president; Charles St. John, Samuel Fowler, O. J. Brown, Daniel Romaine. W. H. Stewart, clerk; C. T. King, treasurer.
- March 7, 1855.—Orville J. Brown, president; John M. Heller, Eli Van Inwegen, Benjamin S. Hall, John M. Rowley. Dayton T. Cox, clerk; Rufus Ferguson, treasurer.

Other elective officers for the current year (1880-81) are Elias Rhodes, Aaron Decker, Peter Whitaker, assessors; Patrick Burns, collector. Appointed officers for the current year, 1880-81: Dayton T. Cox, police justice; Samuel J. Walley, chief of police; Philip Gorr, James L. Westervelt, James McLaughlin,

* Under the amended charter a new election took place the same year. The president chosen by the people for two years, and three trustees each year to hold office two years.

special night policemen; Patrick Lyons, street commissioner; C. E. Cuddeback, corporation attorney; Dr. John F. Higgins, health physician; John Kirk, W. J. Murphy, L. S. Rosencrance, board of health; J. P. Knox, pound-master.

The police justices for fourteen years past have been John Dutton, 1866; James M. Penny, 1868; Henry Dutcher, 1870-72. Appointed under the new charter by the board: Henry Dutcher, 1873; D. T. Cox, 1874-80.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Port Jervis has been unusually free from fires. There is an excellent organization of companies, under the direction of a chief engineer and two assistants. Fortunately their services have not often been called into requisition, but in competitive drills, on parades, and in such actual service as has sometimes been required the department has shown that it compares favorably with those of any other village.

The present officers (November, 1880) are H. G. Lee, chief engineer and member of Delaware Hose Company, No. 2; Ira B. Cole, first assistant engineer and member of Neversink Hose Company, No. 1; George W. Bailey, second assistant engineer and member of Hook-and-Ladder Company No. 1; L. C. Sanger, treasurer and member of Everitt Hose Company, No. 4; Stephen St. John, Jr., secretary and member of Neversink Hose Company, No. 1.

There are no engine companies now in existence. There is one hook-and-ladder company, and there are four hose companies. The introduction of the system of water-works has furnished pressure sufficient to force water through hose to any required height.

The following are the names of the companies, their location, and the names of the foreman of each:

Maghogomock Hook-and-Ladder Company; having about 35 members, and located on Railroad Avenue near Pike Street. Henry McCoy is the foreman. This company was organized soon after the incorporation of the village, and has maintained a vigorous organization for nearly twenty-five years.

Neversink Hose Company, No. 1; having 30 members, and located on Orange Street between Canal and Ulster Streets. Lyman Lockwood is the present foreman. This company was formerly the Excelsior Engine Company.

Delaware Hose Company, No. 2; having 40 members, and located on Sussex Street between Ball and Front Streets. C. I. Terwilliger is the foreman. This was the first engine company, and was organized Jan. 17, 1857.

McDougall Hose Company, No. 3; having 25 members, and located on Railroad Avenue near Pike Street. Thomas Beirne is the present foreman. This company was also organized about 1857, and was then known as the Fowler Engine Company.

Everitt Hose Company, No. 4; having 25 members, and located at the corner of Ball and Owen Streets.

L. C. Sanger is the foreman. This is a new company, organized about three years since.

Excelsior Hose Company, No. 5; having about 15 members, and located in Germantown, so called, western part of the village. The present foreman is J. Harding. This was organized as an engine company, but became a hose company soon after.

is a small village northeast from Cuddebackville, and also on the canal. The name perpetuates the memory of the early landlord, John Westbrook, who kept a tavern at this place before the Revolution, and whose descendants resided for a long time in this vicinity. It is one of the series of villages and "ports" that have grown up along the canal. All of the village except a few dwelling-houses lies over the county line in Sullivan County.

PORT ORANGE

is situated on the canal a short distance south of Westbrookville, and is really a part of the same neighborhood. There is little or no business at this point except some small canal traffic.

CUDDEBACKVILLE

is in the northeastern part of the town, on the line of the canal. It is named in honor of the old settler, Jacob Cuddeback, one of the original owners of the patent granted in 1697. One of his descendants, Col. William Cuddeback, owned the site of the village at the time the canal was built, and hence the name is doubly appropriate. William Cuddeback died Jan. 27, 1846, aged eighty-seven.

The Cuddeback Hotel, now kept by Levi Cuddeback, was built and kept for many years by Peter Cuddeback. It was known in the old times as the Jeffersonian House, and was a favorite stopping-place on the old stage-road from Goshen to Cohecton. The house has always remained in the Cuddeback family, though it was kept for a time by Thomas Gumaer. It is a large and convenient hotel, and connected with it is one of the finest picnic-grounds in the county. The other business at this village comprises the store of the Norris Brothers, where the post-office is kept, Alfred Norris postmaster. His brother was the previous incumbent for twenty years, and before him Peter Cuddeback was postmaster for a long time. There is also a blacksmith-shop, by Thomas Rumsey; a wagon-shop, by Samuel Pine; a brickyard, by Mr. Ridgeway; a grocery-store and canal stabling, by Harmanus Cuddeback.

There is still living at this village one of the older members of the family, Mr. James Cuddeback. He is eighty-two years of age, and the son of William A. Cuddeback. He resides on his father's homestead, where he was born, and where he has spent his whole life. His grandfather was Abraham Cuddeback, who lived below Gumaer's. He recalls the names of some early teachers, as White, Brooks, Peter E. Gumaer, and Berry.

The wife of James Cuddeback is a daughter of Benjamin Cuddeback, who died a few years since at the age of ninety-one.

WILLIAM C. ROSE, for about forty years superintendent of one of the divisions of the Delaware and Hudson Canal, was a resident of Cuddebackville until 1866, when he removed to Port Jervis, where he died, at the age of sixty-six years, eight months, and four days. He was born in Sherburne, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 22, 1807. His parents were from Massachusetts, although his Christian as well as his given name suggests the inference that he was of the family of Capt. William Rose, of Revolutionary memory, whose remains were interred in the "Plains" cemetery in Mount Hope. His father was Rufus Rose, of whom he was the second son. At the age of twenty-one years Mr. Rose left the home of his parents and sought employment in the neighborhood of Honesdale, Pa. The Delaware and Hudson Canal was then being built, and he was soon under engagement with a contractor on the Pennsylvania section. When the canal was completed he was given charge of the section which he had aided to construct. From this position he was removed, in 1832, to Cuddebackville, as superintendent, as already stated. The long years of service in the employ of the company here are the best possible testimony to his capacity and to his integrity. Resigning his post on account of failing health, he removed to Port Jervis, where he accepted the agency of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, which he retained until a short time before his death, when his health obliged its transfer. Mr. Rose was married in 1832. His children were William C., Jr., of Phillipsport, Sullivan Co.; Lyman O., who succeeded his father as canal superintendent at Cuddebackville; Charles C.; and two daughters, one of whom is the wife of Dr. George H. Fossard. He was a zealous laborer in the field of Christian faith, and at the time of his death a member of the Reformed Dutch Church of Port Jervis. His death was the result of a cerebral disorder.

ROSE POINT

is the poetical name given to the "port" at locks No. 54 and 55, south of Cuddebackville about one mile. It is also a station upon the Monticello Railroad, and very near to the Jesse Tillotson place, where stood the old fort of Jacob Rutzen DeWitt.

PORT CLINTON.

in a similar way, has been bestowed upon the point, a short distance below, where is located Lock No. 56.

At this place there is a store by William L. Norris. Here is also the "lodge" of the "Neversink Farm," the special name given by Mr. Godfroy to the large estate owned by him, and comprising the table-land, the old spring, and the burial-place of the early Cuddeback colony of 1690-95.

is a small hamlet situated on the canal, a short distance north of Huguenot. Its name is derived from the Gumaer families, whose ancestor was one of the original patentees of the Peenpack Valley in 1697.

HUGUENOT

is situated on the canal between Port Jervis and Gumaer's. It derives its name from the fact that many of the early settlers were of the Huguenot emigration which came to Kingston very early, and whose children settled in this valley. Near Huguenot are the valuable mineral springs discovered about twenty years since.

There is a store here by C. J. Van Inwegen, Sr., one by C. J. Van Inwegen, Jr., and another by Mrs. Bidwell, a boat-yard by John Thorp, and there is a blacksmith-shop. The Mineral Springs House is owned by Peter Cuddeback. A new enterprise is now (November, 1880) creating a large demand for labor at this place, viz.: the building of the "Pipe Line" for the transmission of oil. Stationary engines will force the oil at this point through the pipes over the mountains.

CARPENTER'S POINT

derived its name from an early settler, who established the ferry and owned the land at the junction of the Neversink and Delaware Rivers. It is a short distance south of Port Jervis, and has been long and extensively known by its present name. It is an old point of ferriage across the Delaware. The "Tri-States-Rock" is situated just at the extremity of the Point, and marks the junction of the lines of three States,—New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. The hamlet of early times was on the east side of the Neversink, and half a mile or more below what is now the village of Carpenter's Point. The Carpenter family are buried at the southernmost point of Laurel Grove Cemetery, and within a short distance of the "Tri-States Rock." The inscriptions are as follows:

"Benjamin Carpenter, died Feb. 26, 1820, aged 64."

"Margaret, his wife, died 1853, aged 84."

"Solomon Carpenter, died 1828, aged 28."

There are several stores and other business places; the old grist-mill and a number of private dwellings constitute the present village. There is a bridge over the Neversink, built July, 1868, by F. Caskey, J. H. Patterson, H. Cuddeback, committee; D. S. Rhule, architect; and D. S. Rhule, O. J. Brown, builders.

SPARROWBUSH

is a hamlet near Bolton Basin, west of Honesville, on the canal, and has a post-office. A post-office was established there in 1827 under the name of Honesville, Dr. Dickinson, postmaster; about 1830, David Decker was appointed; succeeded in 1840 by Jonathan West, who resigned in 1844, and the office was closed. It was re-established in 1850 under the present name, L. F. Hough, postmaster. His successors have been N. R. Higby, M. M. Shultz, Charles Cooper, Wm. Goodenough, J. C. West, and the present incumbent, H. F. West.

is in the west part of the town, in the neighborhood of the Baptist church, as marked upon the recent maps. This church was something of an off-shoot from the Baptist Church of Port Jervis. It was, however, continued for only a few years.

QUARRY HILL

is the local name of the school district in the extreme western angle of the town and the county. It derives its name from the business of quarrying carried on to some extent in that section.

SHIN HOLLOW

is the euphonious and suggestive name applied to a neighborhood on the slopes of the Shawangunk Mountains where the Erie Railway crosses the town line into Mount Hope.

GERMANTOWN

is the name applied to the western extension of Port Jervis along the Delaware River, situated between that and the canal. An extensive glass manufactory is located here, and a population of 1000 or more has settled here. One of the public schools is located in this division of the village.

HONESVILLE

is a small hamlet on the canal west of Port Jervis, the former name of the post-office now known as Sparrowbush, and not far from the same locality.

BOLTON

is situated on the canal in the southwestern part of the town, and is named after John Bolton, one of the original members of the canal company.

PARADISE

is situated on the border of Sullivan County northwest of Cuddebackville. It is not clear what gave to it its delightful name, as it is in close proximity to some other names suggestive of a far different locality. Paradise is a station on the Monticello road, and Silas T. L. Norris is postmaster, station-agent, and hotel-keeper. There is a brick-yard by Roys & Cady, and a mile below is the flag-stone business of John F. Kilgore.

BROOKLYN

is an extension of Port Jervis beyond the canal bridge, a cosy neighborhood at the base of the hills.

is across the Delaware in Pennsylvania, but so closely united with Port Jervis in business that it is proper to be mentioned in connection with the latter. It is united by what is technically known as a "Roebbling suspension" bridge. It is a very elegant structure, consisting of two spans of 325 feet each. The bridge was erected in 1870-71, but swept away in the ice gorge of 1874. It was rebuilt immediately.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

There are but few notes upon the early schools in any records now available. Jeremiah Van Auken, killed by the Indians, was an early teacher. Peter E. Gumaer, the surveyor, was also a teacher for many years. Mr. Cornelius Westfall, of Pike Co., Pa. (as related by a local correspondent of the Port Jervis Gazette), stated that in his boyhood he attended school in a small log building situated upon the hill just above the present canal bridge at Germantown.

At the first town-meeting in 1798 school commissioners were chosen, viz.: David R. Arnell, Abel Woodhull, James Finch, Jr., and William Rose. In 1799 commissioners were also chosen, but the names are so much obliterated in the records that they cannot be given. These proceedings were under an early school law of 1795, but no further official action by the town with reference to schools took place until the passage of the act of 1812, which was the real foundation of the general school system of the State.

At the town-meeting of 1813 the provisions of the new law were complied with by the appointment of commissioners and inspectors, and by the voting of a tax for school purposes equal to the sum which should be received from the State. Under date of June 19, 1813, the commissioners divided the town into six districts, all of which were north of the "old county line," as at that time the lower portion of the present town (Port Jervis and vicinity) was a part of Minisink.

The commissioners who served one or more years each during the period 1813 to 1843 were the following, viz.: Abraham Taylor, David G. Finch, Abraham Cuddeback, Jacob Murray, John King, Peter E. Gumaer, Gideon Tuthill, Elisha S. Cadwell, William Mulock, Jr., Silas Loomis, William A. Cuddeback, Joseph Ketchum, Jr., Eleazer Harding, George F. Seybolt, Zophar Finch, Silas Loomis, Isaac Willet, Peter E. Gumaer, Abijah Norris, James Finch, Jr., Philip Ketcham, John Osborn, Benjamin Van Inwegen, David G. Finch, Joshua Penny, William S. Little, Elisha Reeve, Jr., Joel Whitlock, Stephen St. John, Daniel Mapes, Gilbert F. Mondon, David Swartwout, Abraham B. Bross, William Lockwood, Samuel Swartwout, Cornelius Gray, Benjamin Whitehead, Peter Cuddeback, John W. Sweezy, Jeremiah Gumaer, Charles Hardenburgh, Matthias Pierson, Benjamin Carpenter, Solomon Westbrook, Elijah Gordon, James V. Hulse, John S. Van Inwegen, Daniel Hilferty, Henry Woolsey, Jonathan G. Storey, John D. Westfall, John Van Etten, Jr., Elting Cuddeback, Eli Van Inwegen, John Lambert, Edward L. Norris.

During the same period the following persons served as inspectors of schools one or more years each, viz.: Benjamin Prime, Peter E. Gumaer, Stephen Farnum, Jacob Murray, James Finch, Jr., Silas Loomis, William Mulock, James H. Prime, Abraham Cuddeback, David G. Finch, William S. Little, Benjamin Van Inwegen, Joseph Reed, William Cuddeback, James Harding, Peter Cuddeback, Joseph Chattle, John Whiting, Asa Smith, Cornelius C. Elting, Charles Hardenburgh, Cornelius Dickinson, John Van Etten, Charac A. Van Inwegen, Nathan Felch, Andrew Crawford, Lewis Van Inwegen, Daniel Cornwall, James H. Taylor.

Under the method of supervision by town superintendents the following were the incumbents of that office in Deerpark:

Elected annually: 1844, James H. Taylor; 1845-47, Thomas Cuddeback. Elected once in two years: 1848, Alexander T. Johnson; 1850, Horace K. Stewart; 1852, Alexander T. Johnson; 1854, Stephen C. Merteenas; 1856, Henry O. Fowler.

Town superintendents were superseded in June, 1856, by district commissioners. All supervision of the schools by the town was abolished at that time.

The distribution of school money for the year ending March 28, 1820, was as follows:

To school district No. 1, $21.56; to school district No. 2, $34.43; to No. 3, $28; to No. 4, $21.56; to No. 5, $18.92; to joint district No. 1 (Walkill), $1.13; to joint district No. 17 (Walkill), $2.65; to joint district No. 10 (Mamakating), $6.81; to joint district No. 13 (Mamakating), $10.21; total award, $145.28. The report for the next year (1821) shows that there were five districts and four parts of districts. The number of children between the ages of five and fifteen in district No. 1 was 53; in district No. 2, 91; in district No. 3, 62; in district No. 4, 53; in district No. 5, 48; in joint No. 1 (Walkill), 5; in joint No. 17 (Walkill), 3; in joint No. 10 (Mamakating), 18; in joint No. 13 (Mamakating), 29; total number of children in town, 360; of these 324 had attended school during the year.

From the commissioners' certificate of apportionment for March, 1880, we take the following statistics, showing certain interesting facts concerning the schools of the present time:

District No. 1 (Port Jervis) has 2120 children between five and twenty-one years of age, and received $5183.74 public money; district No. 2, 28 children and $30.95 public money; district No. 3, 104 children and $189.13 public money; district No. 4, 8 children and $8.68 public money; district No. 5, 8 children and $10.69 public money; district No. 6, 30 children and $79.49 public money; district No. 7, 73 children and $122.92 public money; district No. 8 (Carpenter's Point), 218 children and $352.80 public money; district No. 9, 74 children and $128.16 public money; district No. 10, 72 children and $140.41 public money; district No. 11, 77 children and $135.24 public money; district No. 12, 115 children and $178.82 public money; district No. 13, 100 children and $185.53 public money; district No. 14, 180 children (Sparrow-bush) and $345.46 public money; total number of children 3707, and total amount of money disbursed $7092.02. The contrast between this report and that sixty years ago is very marked.

HIGH SCHOOL IN THE FOWLER HOUSE.

This building was leased in 1862 by Rev. J. H. Northrup, of Monticello, for the purpose of opening a school the middle of April. The enterprise was continued for a few years and abandoned.

ST. MARY'S ORPHAN ASYLUM was founded in 1871 by the Rev. Father Nilan, and by him placed under the Sisters of Charity. Its object was to provide for orphan children a home, and to train and instruct them for a proper place in society. In 1875 a law was passed by the Legislature of the State having for its object the same ideas as led to the founding of this institution. St. Mary's Asylum has also the orphan Catholic children from the county almshouse under its charge. The institution is located upon Ball Street, between Sussex and Fowler Streets. The building is of brick, commodious, and well arranged. The Sisters receive children generally for instruction not only in the common English branches, but in higher studies, and in music, both vocal and instrumental. Instruction is also given in plain and ornamental needle-work. The asylum is a branch of the academy and convent located at Mount St. Vincent, on the Hudson, a short distance from New York.

The Port Jervis institution has been in charge of Sister Matilda from the first.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF PORT JERVIS

consist of five union free schools and a central academy or high school.

The records of the public schools of Port Jervis were destroyed by fire June 13, 1866. There is consequently no documentary evidence of the management and condition of the schools previous to that time, except such as appears in one or two acts of the Legislature. The evidence, however, of persons yet living establishes the fact that in January, 1862, the inhabitants of the village, dissatisfied with the working of their schools under the old rate-bill system, reorganized them under the general free school law. A Board of Education, consisting of Dr. Charles W. Lawrence, Samuel B. Farnum, Elting Cuddeback, Peter Wells, Amos Van Etten, Wm. K. Bartlett, and John Strader, was elected. The board organized by making Dr. Lawrence president and Mr. Van Etten secretary. The building known as the Main Street school-house was the only one owned by the district, and was too small to afford the requisite accommodations. The basement of the Presbyterian church was hired and used for school purposes. The demands for space having been thus temporarily met, attention was given to the improvement of the schools in methods of discipline, instruction, and general management. Edward W. Manning was appointed principal. He held the position until his death, which occurred two or three years later, and was a zealous and successful teacher. His successor was David Beattie, now superintendent of public schools in Troy. After a short but efficient administration Mr. Beattie was succeeded by Isaac M. Wellington, to whose well-directed energy and untiring industry the schools are still indebted for much of their prosperity. Early in 1866 the Catholic schools, hitherto conducted as a part of the public schools, were withdrawn from the control of the Board of Education, and their management and expense were assumed by St. Mary's Church. The causes which led to this separation are not on record.

In April, 1866, the Legislature authorized the raising of $10,000 to build another school-house, the sale of the existing site, and the purchase of a new one. The bonds of the district were issued to the amount of $5000 during the year by the Board of Education, of which the members were Dr. C. M. Lawrence, president; Peter Wells, secretary; Samuel B. Farnum, Elting Cuddeback, Wm. K. Bartlett, Amos Van Etten, and John Strader.

The first steps towards forming an academical department, subject to the visitation and direction of the regents, were taken by making application to them for a charter, which was ultimately granted.

The report to the annual school-meeting stated that there were in the district 1816 children legally entitled to attend school. Of these, 564 were, on an average, in daily attendance, and 1220 were enrolled during some part of the year.

Thomas Holt and Aaron Van Akin were elected in place of Samuel B. Farnum and Wm. K. Bartlett, otherwise the Board of Education remained the same. Dr. Chas. M. Lawrence was again chosen president, and Amos Van Etten secretary. A site was obtained on the corner of Church and Hammond Streets, and a contract made for the erection of a new school-house.

In 1867 legislative action was secured to enlarge the district by annexing parts of two adjoining districts. The new school-house was completed at a cost of $9992 and occupied.

The expiration of the term of service and in some cases resignation of office created several vacancies, which were filled by the election of John McAllister, Thos. Holt, Horace K. Stewart, Henry Dutcher, and Dr. Thomas Cuddeback, who, with John Strader and Dr. Chas. M. Lawrence, constituted the new board. The latter was chosen its president, and H. K. Stewart its secretary. The first preliminary academic examination was held in November. The clergymen of the village constituted a committee, of which Rev. A. P. Botsford was chairman.

In 1868 further accommodations were demanded, and furnished by the erection of another school-house at an expense of $3635.

The Board of Education, after the annual election, consisted of Dr. Chas. M. Lawrence, president; Horace K. Stewart, secretary; Lewis E. Carr, John McAllister, Thomas Holt, Henry Dutcher, and Dr. Thomas Cuddeback. The parochial schools of the Catholic Church were again received as a part of the public schools, but were soon disbanded in consequence of the burning of the church, and the pupils were distributed among the other schools. In December the superintendent, I. M. Wellington, resigned, and soon after Edward A. Kingsley was appointed his successor. In October, 1869, Thomas J. Bonnell was elected in place of Dr. Cuddeback, otherwise the board remained the same and retained the same officers. After the annual election in October, 1870, the members of the board were Dr. C. M. Lawrence, president; Lewis E. Carr, secretary; Amos Van Etten, Chas. W. Buckley, N. H. Chandler, Henry Dutcher, and Thomas J. Bonnell. E. A. Kingsley having resigned in December, A. B. Wilbur was appointed superintendent, and still holds the position.

In July, 1871, Comeses Kerr was appointed a member of the board in place of N. H. Chandler, removed to another State. After the annual election of this year Dr. C. M. Lawrence, president; Lewis E. Carr, secretary; Amos Van Etten, Chas. W. Buckley, Henry Dutcher, Thomas J. Bonnell, and Lemuel E. Elston were the board. In consequence of increasing demands for accommodation a large building, known as the Mountain House, capable of accommodating six hundred pupils, was purchased near the close of the year at an expense of $9000, and prepared in part for immediate use. In 1872 no change occurred either in the membership or presidency of the board. L. E. Elston was appointed secretary.

After the annual meeting in 1873 the board consisted of Dr. C. M. Lawrence, president; A. J. Snyder, secretary; Lewis E. Carr, John W. Decker, Hamilton W. Quick, Daniel Romaine, and Alfred H. Corwin.

Since that time the successive boards have been constituted as follows: from October, 1874, to October, 1875, Dr. Chas. M. Lawrence, president; Lewis E. Carr, secretary; A. J. Snyder, Hamilton W. Quick, Alf. H. Corwin, John W. Decker, Daniel Romaine. From October, 1875, to October, 1876, Dr. Chas. M. Lawrence, president; A. J. Snyder, secretary; Hamilton W. Quick, Alf. H. Corwin, John W. Decker, Daniel Romaine, Elting Cuddeback. From October, 1876, to October, 1877, Dr. Chas. M. Lawrence, president; A. J. Snyder, secretary; Daniel Romaine, Hamilton W. Quick, Alf. H. Corwin, Elting Cuddeback, Wm. E. McCormick. From October, 1877, to October, 1878, Dr. Chas. M. Lawrence, president; A. J. Snyder, secretary; Alf. H. Corwin, Daniel Romaine, Hamilton W. Quick, Wm. E. McCormick, O. P. Howell. From October, 1878, to October, 1879, Dr. Chas. M. Lawrence, president; A. J. Snyder, secretary; Hamilton W. Quick, Lewis E.

Carr, Wm. E. McCormick, O. P. Howell, Frank Marvin. From October, 1879, to October, 1880, Dr. Chas. M. Lawrence, president; A. J. Snyder, secretary; O. P. Howell, Lewis E. Carr, Frank Marvin, Peter Whitaker, Thos. J. Bonnell, Luke S. Rosencrance. From October, 1880, to October, 1881, Dr. Chas. M. Lawrence, president; A. J. Snyder, secretary; Lewis E. Carr, O. P. Howell, Thos. J. Bonnell, Frank Marvin, Peter Whitaker, Horace Hammond.

The schools are graded and in excellent condition. Nearly 1300 of the 2452 entitled to free school privileges are daily in attendance, and 1975 spend some part of the year in school. Five buildings, four of which are owned by the district, are used for school purposes. Twenty-nine teachers are employed, of whom two are graduates of college, six of normal schools, and nineteen of the local academical department. In this department there are fifty-six students engaged in all the various studies usually pursued in academies and seminaries, and fitting themselves, according to their own inclinations, either for business or college. It is located in the Mountain House, and the superintendent is the principal. His assistants are Fred W. Best, of the Potsdam Normal School, and Miss Minnie Botsford, of Vassar College. The teachers in the other grades, in the same building, are Mrs. Celestia Ernsberger, and Misses Emma L. Stoutenberg, Ella M. Welch, Anna B. Ruddick, Ella J. Olmstead, Fannie M. Hull, Florence Mondon, Maggie F. Gallagher, and Belle Barnum.

Miss Tilla White is the principal of the Main Street School. Her assistants are Misses Jennie Holt, Leah Pflaum, and Jennie Gaylord.

The principal of the Church Street School is Miss Ella Margison. Her assistants are Mrs. Joanna Anderson, Misses Ella Campbell, Lizzie Coyle, Ada I. DeKay, Janette Sherring, Mary Coyle, and Edith Palmer.

The principal of the Riverside School is Miss Lizzie Price, and her assistant is Miss Phoebe Gordon.

Miss Emma Goodspeed is the principal of the Germantown School, and her assistants are Misses Ida Dutcher and Jessie Bross.

The people of this village have always manifested their deep interest in education by making liberal provision for their schools, and the result is schools of which they are justly proud.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE REFORMED PROTESTANT DUTCH CHURCH OF MAGAGHEMECK was incorporated by a certificate executed March 14, 1789. The minister named in the instrument was Rev. Elias Van Bunschooten, V.D.M. The board of elders and deacons comprised the following persons: Solomon Coykendall, Benjamin Depuy, Wilhelmus Cole, Samuel Depuy, Wilhelmus Vredenburg, Jacobus Swartwout, Simeon Westfall, Johannes Decker.

Of this church, organized many years earlier than the above date of incorporation, we have the following account, condensed from a historical discourse prepared for the dedication of the new chapel, by Rev. S. W. Mills, Oct. 22, 1878:

The date of its organization was probably Aug. 23, 1737, when we find the first recorded act of the Consistory signed by Mancius in their name. It was known as the Reformed Dutch Church of Machackemeck. At the same time the churches of Menissinck, Walpeck, and Smithfield were organized, since they all bear the same date. These four churches were all located upon the "Old Mine Road," leading from Kingston to the copper-mines in Pahaquarry.

Johannes Casparus Fryenmoet was the first settled pastor over these four churches. He proved to be a man acceptable not only to his own people, but whose fame spread abroad far and wide. Soon after his settlement occurs the following record:

"Joh. Casparus Fryenmuth, young man, born in Switzerland, and Lena Van Etten, young maiden, born in Nytsfield, married with a license from Governor Morris, in Jersey, by Justice Abram van Camp, 23d day of July, 1742."

The salary paid to Mr. Fryenmoet by the four churches was subsequently fixed (Feb. 4, 1745) at £17 10s. from each of the three churches, Machackemeck, Menissinck, and Walpeck, in "New York current money," and a like amount from Smithfield in "proclamation money," being £70 in all, or $175, and in addition to this twenty-five schepels* of oats from each church, and his firewood. The amount seems to us amazingly small, but it was probably in keeping with the times and circumstances of the people. A parsonage was procured in 1745, each of the four churches to bear a fourth part of the expense, with an agreement subsequently made (April 16, 1750) that if any of them had "lawful and ecclesiastical reasons to separate from the other churches the Consistory shall purchase the fourth part of the house and lot of the retiring church, provided they wished to retain the same, and if not, then the house and lot shall be sold to the highest bidder." The parsonage was located three or four miles below Montague, on the farm lately occupied by Eli Fuller, deceased, at what was called Nominack, opposite Nominack Island and near the old Nominack Fort, erected here during the French and Indian war. This spot was central to the four churches. The four Consistories often met here in joint session, and the record of their proceedings frequently closes with the expression, "Done in Consistory at Nominack." Hence the church of Minisink was sometimes called the "Nominack Church."

The only thing bearing upon the early erection of a house of worship in any of the church records or papers is in the following minute of March 7, 1742:

* A schepel is three pecks.

"The Reverend Consistories of the two churches met together and executed the following. Having approved of the object by collection to aid and build up the Low Dutch Churches in the States of New York and New Jersey, and that for this object suitable persons should be chosen by Consistories and justices in these churches; The Reverend Consistory chose Jan Van Vliet, William Cool, Hannes Westbroeck, Hendrick Kortrecht. Besides his Majesty's justices chose Salomon Davids, Peter Keuikendal, William Kortrecht. The following persons were appointed collectors, viz.: Jacobus Swartwood, Jan Van Vleit, Hendrick Kortrecht, and Derrick Westbroeck." In August following (21st) "the collectors reported that they had collected £13 9s. 0d. Their expenses were £2 0s. 4d. Jan. 7, 1743, The Reverend Consistory resolved that of the money collected each church should retain half. That the money should be appropriated for the upbuilding of one church should they agree to build together, and if not, then each church should retain the amount collected in their bounds. And if it should occur that they should both build and any money should remain over, it should be used for the benefit of both churches, and if more money should be collected, it would be subject to the above conditions."

The probability is that the church was erected in consequence of this action during the year 1743. Whether two buildings were reared, or but one, it is not likely from the above amount, a trifle over twenty-eight dollars, that much surplus was left after completing the work. But as it may have been built of logs, and perhaps not more than thirty feet square upon the ground, and much of the material used may have been given by the people and not a little of the work done by them gratuitously, the probability is that they fell but little short of the amount needed.

The site of this building was opposite the old burying-yard, and not far from the present dwelling-house of Eli Van Inwegen. In this the people of this congregation and of this whole valley worshiped until July, 1779, when it was burned by the Indians under Brant, a day or two before the memorable battle of Minisink.

Mr. Fryenmoet continued his labors here for fifteen years, until Aug. 12, 1756, when he was driven out by the Indian massacres in this section in connection with the French and Indian war. He seems to have left here in great haste, for in the minutes of Synod it is said, "Fleeing before the public enemy he came to North Branch (N. J.), and was several times asked by the Consistory there to officiate, which he did with so much acceptance that many members of the four united congregations requested that he might preach in all the churches." A large majority of the people desired to have him called, but the Consistory opposing it, no little dispute arose, and as the result no call was given him. He received a call soon after from Kinderhook, Claverack, and Livingston Manor, which was accepted, and where he labored with very great acceptance and success for twenty-one years. He died about 1778, and his remains were interred under the Kinderhook church.

Rev. Thomas Romeyn, the second pastor, preached here in April, 1760, and on Sept. 6th of the same year accepted a call from them. He was born in Pompton, N. J., March 20, 1729. He pursued his collegiate studies at Nassau Hall, and his theological studies under Goetchius and T. Frelinghuysen. He sailed from New York for Europe April 11, 1752, to receive ordination, and was ordained by the Classis of Amsterdam September 3d of the same year, and accepted a call from Success, Newtown, Oyster Bay, and Jamaica (L. I.), Nov. 10, 1752, where he remained eight years, until coming here. During his ministry here he commenced religious services in the Clove, on the opposite side of the mountain, in the town of Wantage, near Deckertown, which resulted in the organization of a church there in the time of his successor. During his settlement here Mr. Romeyn was married to Susan Van Campen (his second wife), daughter of Col. Abraham Van Campen, of Pahaquarry, an elder in the church of Walpack. Her family name was perpetuated in one of their sons, James Van Campen Romeyn, a minister of great excellence and influence for over fifty years, dying in 1840. Of his seven sons, four devoted themselves to the ministry, one of whom died soon after his licensure. Another (Theodore) was settled at Somerville, N. J., where he died at the age of twenty-nine. A third (James) was pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church at Hackensack, N. J., for about thirty-three years, when he was disabled by paralysis, and after lingering for several years died in 1840. The fourth (Thomas) was for several years settled at Niskayuna and Amity, and died in 1857. A grandson (James, son of James V. C.) was for many years an able and learned minister, and died in 1859. A great-grandson, Rev. Theodore B. Romeyn, D.D., is at the present time pastor of the First Reformed Church in Hackensack, N. J.

After twelve years of faithful service in these churches, Mr. Romeyn accepted a call from the Reformed Dutch Church of Caughnawaga, Montgomery Co., N. Y., in 1772, and remained pastor thereof for twenty-one years, until compelled by feeble health to relinquish his charge, and where he also died, Oct. 22, 1794. After the departure of Mr. Romeyn the churches here were without a pastor during a period of thirteen years. This period embraced the struggle of the Revolutionary war. They were visited from time to time during this period by ministers from abroad, who preached to them and administered the ordinances. In each year after Mr. Romeyn left them, until the settlement of his successor, we find a record of baptisms, the whole number being 441.

Rev. Elias Van Bunschooten was the third pastor of these churches. The name is commonly called Van Benschoten, but as written by himself was invariably Van Bunschooten. This minister, so extensively known by name in the denomination, was the son of Teunis Van Bunschooten, and was born at New Hackensack, Dutchess Co., N. Y., Oct. 26, 1738. He was graduated at Princeton College in 1768, and studied theology with Dr. Hermanus Meyer, of Kingston. He was licensed to preach in 1773, and was settled at Schaghticoke, Albany Co., N. Y., the same year, where he remained for twelve years. On May 12, 1785, a call was given him by these three churches, which was accepted July 9th, and he was installed

August 28th by Rev. Dr. Jacob R. Hardenbergh, of Marbletown. His labors here were devoted at first to the three churches,—Machackemech, Menissinck, and Walpack,—and in addition to these, preaching at the Clove, near Deckertown. About two years after his settlement here application was made to the Classis of New Brunswick, with which these churches were then connected, for the organization of a church at the Clove. The organization was effected April 16, 1788. His services were divided subsequently between that church and those in the valley here, and at length, in 1792, he removed to the Clove, where he bought a farm and mill. His pastoral connection with the three churches here continued until 1799. While at the Clove he preached for some length of time at Westtown,* but for several of the last years of his ministry his labors were confined to the former place. Here he exercised his ministry, to the general acceptance of his people, until 1812, when, on account of advanced age, he resigned his charge. Three years later, after a long and painful illness, his earthly life closed, on Jan. 10, 1815, in his seventy-seventh year.

That for which Mr. Van Bunschooten is chiefly remembered in the church is his generous donation for the purposes of theological education. In 1814, only a few months previous to his death, he gave to the trustees of Queen's (now Rutgers) College $14,640, increased by his will to $17,000, the income of which was to be applied to the education of "pious youth who hope they have a call of God to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ;" those receiving the benefits thereof to be recommended by the General Synod. This fund at the present time exceeds $20,000, and has educated a large number of faithful and devoted ministers in the denomination. Probably about 150 have entered the ministry who have been educated by it, not a few of whom have become missionaries and are now preaching the gospel to the heathen. Having been wisely invested so as to answer the purpose designed by the donor, not a dollar has been lost, notwithstanding all the financial reverses in the country from time to time since its bestowment.

During the ministry of Mr. Van Bunschooten the church edifice that had been burned by Brant was rebuilt. The probability is that the work was commenced in 1786, as we find a paper with the names of persons in various sums, of the dates of Jan. 24, March 13, May 4, May 29, May 31, June 1, and June 2, 1786. From this and from the following item, found in an inventory of church property dated March 29, 1793, "One acre of ground with the church on it without any annual income from the seats," showing that the edifice was then built and in use, we are safe in saying that it was probably erected in 1786. Jan. 1, 1796, one pound, eighteen shillings, and fourpence was paid to James Van Auken (in a settlement), "which was due said Van Auken for building the meeting-house." This was probably a balance due him for work done some years before. The building was erected upon the site occupied by the one which had been burned, and standing near it were majestic oak-trees, whose towering height and wide-spreading branches presented a grand spectacle. It was forty feet square, two stories high, covered with a low roof coming to a point in the centre, sided with planed pine boards and seated inside with the same, and was unpainted both within and without. On the east side of the church was a low gallery, which was reached by stairs running up on the outside of the building. These becoming dilapidated during the latter years of the edifice, were taken down. A single door in front, next to the road, afforded entrance to the building. The pulpit stood on the side opposite to the entrance, and was from six to eight feet high, standing on a single post, inclosed, sexagon in form, and over it a large "sounding-board." The elders and deacons occupied seats specially designated for them, nearest the pulpit, and were uniformly greeted by the minister upon descending from it. There was in it, as well as in the first church edifice, the "Magistrate's Seat," differing from the other seats in having a roof or cover over it, resting upon two posts. This was occupied by the justice of the peace during the time of service.

Collections were taken in small black bags, fastened on the end of a rod about six feet long, with a little bell at the bottom of the bag, which served to announce the approach of the worthy dignitary carrying this indispensable article of church furniture. The contents of the bag were not always "current money with the merchant," as occasional horse-nails, gravestones, and other articles, deposited by mischievous ones, sometimes indicated. A tin horn served the purpose of a bell to summon the worshipers to the sanctuary. Two services were held, morning and afternoon, with an hour's intermission, when the refreshments brought by those coming from a distance were partaken of. There was no organ or instrument of any kind, nor even a choir. A simple chorister or leader, called in Dutch voorzanger, led, but not monopolized, the singing, standing in front of the pulpit, the entire congregation joining therein.

After Mr. Van Bunschooten's labors as pastor in the churches here ceased, the parsonage owned by the three churches was sold and the proceeds divided among them. The portion coming to this church was $442.20, and was paid to them May 1, 1800. This was called the "Parsonage Fund," and by the accumulation of interest had increased by Sept. 22, 1827, to $997.80. It was used from time to time in repairs upon the church and other ways, but chiefly in the erection of the new church edifice in 1833, $849.47 having been appropriated to this purpose at different times.

* It would seem that a church was organized at Westtown under Van Bunschooten, since it appears in the minutes of General Synod (1800) with Machackemech, Minisink, and Walpack.

After the labors of Mr. Van Bunschooten as pastor here ceased, the church remained vacant until in the winter of 1803 and 1804, when the Rev. John Demarest became their fourth pastor. In the interim they had occasional supplies. He was the first minister here whose services were wholly in the English language. He was born at New Bridge, N. J., three miles from Hackensack, in 1763. He received his literary education at Hackensack Academy, under the rectorship of Dr. Wilson, studied theology with Dr. Solomon Froeligh at Schraalenberg, and was licensed to preach in 1789. His first settlement was over the united churches of Boght and Niskayuna, from 1790 to 1803. He died in New York City in 1837. He had two sons, both of whom entered the ministry. One (William) united with the True Reformed Dutch Church and was for many years settled in New York City, where he died about three years ago. The other, Rev. James Demarest, was connected with the Classis of Orange as pastor of the church at Napanoch from 1841 to 1848, and is still connected with the denomination, residing at Newark, N. J., without charge. A grandson, Rev. James Demarest, Jr., D.D. (son of Rev. Jas. Demarest), is the present pastor of the Second Reformed Church in Kingston.

Upon Mr. Demarest's departure the church was left without a pastor for ten years. During the vacancy reading meetings were held, Jacobus Swartwout conducting the service.

Rev. Cornelius C. Elting was the fifth pastor of this church, he having accepted a call from it in connection with Minisink, dated Nov. 16, 1816, and being ordained and installed Jan. 25, 1817. Mr. Elting was of Huguenot descent, and was born at Hurley, Ulster Co., N. Y., March 25, 1793, and studied with his brother, Rev. Wilhelmus Elting, before entering Queen's College at New Brunswick, where he was graduated in October, 1812. His theological course was pursued in the seminary at New Brunswick, and he was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick May 30, 1816. He preached a short time after his licensure at Pleasant Plains, Dutchess Co., previous to his coming here. Mr. Elting continued to preach at Minisink, in connection with this church, for twenty-one years, until Jan. 30, 1838, when his labors were confined to this church and congregation, which since then have enjoyed the exclusive services of their own minister.

The ministry of Mr. Elting proved highly beneficial to the church. He entered upon his labors under most favorable circumstances. A revival had been in progress for some time, and numerous conversions had taken place. The work continued some months after his settlement. At the first communion, only one month after his installation, 37 persons united with this church upon confession, and at the next one, three months later, 50 were admitted in the same manner, the largest number ever received at a single communion during its whole history. The entire number received in this first year of his ministry was 117, and all upon profession of their faith. He continued his useful labors here for twenty-six years and ten months, when, with an eye not dimmed nor his natural force abated, he entered into his rest Oct. 24, 1843, aged fifty years and seven months.

One or two events took place during the ministry of Mr. Elting having no little bearing upon the interests of the church, and hence demanding notice. One was the erection of a new church edifice and the removal of its site to that now occupied by it. For nearly one hundred years it had been upon the same site. Carpenter's Point, near which it stood, had been the place of business for the surrounding country. There was the mill, store, hotel, and a few dwellings, making it the only hamlet in all this section. There was the ferry, upon the stage-route leading from Newburgh to Milford, and thence to Carbondale, Owego, and Central New York, the great West of the day. All this was to undergo an entire change. The Delaware and Hudson Canal had been constructed, and Port Jervis began to show its head. It was evident to discerning ones that this was henceforth to be the centre of business, and Carpenter's Point must modestly retire. The pastor of the church was far-seeing enough to perceive that a change of location would promote its prosperity, and he became a warm advocate of the measure and its largest contributor. The project met with no little opposition from some east of the Never-sink and in New Jersey, but not enough to defeat it. A site was given by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, who have acted with much generosity in such matters along their line.

At the time of the erection of this building there were not more than a dozen and a half dwellings within the present limits of Port Jervis, with a population scarcely reaching one hundred. There was but one organized church, one small school-house, one physician, two stores, no lawyers, no newspapers or printing-presses, not a single bank, railway, or any of the numerous places of business now found. A trip to the city was a fatiguing, wearisome journey by stage and steamboat, occupying in going and returning three or four days and made only at long intervals.

A few years after the erection of the new church, its corporate name was changed from the Reformed Dutch Church of Mahackamech to the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church of Deerpark, by application to the Legislature. This was done in 1838.

During the ministry of Mr. Elting Sabbath-schools were introduced in the church, which are now regarded as indispensable to its prosperity. From its first organization, the religious instruction of the children and youth had been attended to by the parent or head of the family, who, upon Sabbath evening usually, gathered the household together and catechised them, or by the pastor in Bible and catechetical classes, held generally on the afternoon of some week-day in the school-house, when the teacher would give place for an hour or two to exercises of this nature. The American Sunday-School Union had been organized in 1824, and its agents were employed in organizing schools wherever an opening was found. In 1829 the first school was formed here by Mr. Wood, an agent of the American Sunday-School Union, the Rev. Mr. Elting being chosen as its superintendent.* Having the charge of two congregations, he was necessarily absent half of the time, and hence unable to discharge its duties, and soon resigned, his successor being Solomon Van Auken. For twenty years the school was in operation only during the summer season, but in 1849 it was resolved to keep it open during the entire year.

Thomas White deserves a notice in this history because of a bequest made by him to the church, which brings him before it (when its provisions are complied with) once in each year. Mr. White was a native of England, to which country he was strongly attached. He was well educated, not only in English, but in Latin and Greek, with some knowledge of French. He had likewise learned the trade of making ropes, since in that day every young man in his country, even the king's son, was obliged to learn some trade. He was exceedingly studious and industrious, and when not engaged in teaching would be occupied either in study or with his trade. He came to Peenpack from the east side of the mountain in the autumn of 1776 as a school-teacher, and lived in the house with the father of Peter E. Gumaer, Esq., and taught school therein during the greater part of the Revolutionary war,—the first well-educated teacher in the valley. After closing his services in the valley as school-teacher (which in the estimation of Esquire Gumaer were of immense value) he removed to the neighborhood of his former residence near Mount Hope, where he died in 1807. Mr. White was a firm believer in the Christian religion and in its fundamental doctrines, and by his will directed that ten dollars should be paid yearly to each of four churches for a sermon to be preached upon one of four specified subjects in each church on a certain designated Sabbath in every year forever. The money for this purpose was to be in the hands of the supervisors of the towns of Wallkill and Deerpark, who were to see that the requirements of the will were complied with, and to pay the amount yearly to each church. In May, 1827, the supervisor of the town of Deerpark, Peter E. Gumaer, instead of the yearly payment of ten dollars to the church, according to the strict letter of the will, paid over to the Consistory $150, the interest of which has been appropriated to this object. A like sum was paid to each of the other three churches, thus relieving the supervisors from further responsibility and care in the matter.

The sixth pastor was Rev. George P. Van Wyck, who was settled four months after the death of Mr. Elting. He was born in Bloomingburgh, N. Y., pursued his academical studies at Bloomingburgh and Montgomery, was graduated from Rutgers College in 1840, studied theology at New Brunswick, and was licensed by the Classis of Orange Aug. 1, 1843. He was ordained in the ministry and installed pastor of this church Feb. 29, 1844, the ordination sermon being preached by Rev. R. Pitts. He remained in charge here until May 19, 1852, when he was dismissed to take charge of a Presbyterian congregation in Berlin, Md., and was subsequently settled at Gettysburg and at Chester, Pa. Upon the breaking out of the late war he entered the army as chaplain, and at its close was appointed chaplain in the United States army, having been stationed for the last few years at Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. Hiram Slauson became the seventh pastor, and was installed Feb. 22, 1853, the Rev. Dr. M. N. McLaren preaching at his installation. Mr. Slauson was graduated at Union College in 1837, and previous to his coming here was settled at Northumberland, Saratoga Co., N. Y., from 1844 to 1852. He continued in charge of the church here until October, 1857, when his connection with it was dissolved, he having accepted the call from the Congregational Church at Unionville, Conn. During Mr. Slauson's ministry a parsonage was purchased by the congregation at a cost of $2000, the first one owned by them exclusively. In the second year of his pastorate the church edifice was enlarged and greatly improved, the interior remodeled, the pulpit, which had stood by the door, placed at the opposite end of the building and the seats reversed, the whole costing about $2500.

After Mr. Slauson left the church was vacant four months, when the eighth pastor, Rev. Samuel W. Mills, was settled. His call was dated Dec. 16, 1857, and his installation took place Feb. 22, 1858, the installation sermon being preached by Rev. Dr. M. N. McLaren. His academical studies were prosecuted at Bloomingburgh and Montgomery, graduating from Rutgers College in 1838, and from the theological seminary at New Brunswick in 1842. He was licensed by the Classis of New Brunswick July 25th of the same year, and in October commenced preaching in the Reformed Dutch church at Bloomingburgh, where he was ordained and installed May 30, 1843, remaining there as pastor for fifteen years, until accepting the call here. His services as pastor of this church closed on the second Sabbath in November, 1871, but were continued in supply of the pulpit until the settlement of his successor.

In the winter and spring of 1868 an extensive work of grace was wrought in the church and congregation as well as in the place generally. In point of numbers received into the church, in the genuineness of the work, and in the character and influence of the converts, it was the most extensive revival in the church since 1833. The number received upon confession at a single communion as the result of this work was 38. The entire number received during this pastorate was 249.

The increase of the congregation had been such for a few years, owing to the continuous growth of the village, that the church edifice was too small for the worshipers. It was found, too, that any enlargement

Rutgers College. The building was erected under the superintendence of that skillful architect I. G. Perry, of Binghamton, N. Y., and was dedicated Jan. 19, 1870, the Rev. Dr. DeWitt, of the theological seminary at New Brunswick, preaching the dedication sermon. The cost of the building proper was of the building then in use would be either impracticable or attended with so much expense as to be inadvisable. The result was the erection of the present commodious and attractive edifice in 1868 and 1869. The corner-stone was laid Aug. 18, 1868, when addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Van Zandt, of Montgomery, and Rev. Dr. Campbell, president of $38,287.45, and of the furnishing, including furnaces, gas-fixtures, carpets, upholstering, etc., $5383.65, making in all $43,668.10. This entire sum was provided for before the day of dedication. At the same time an organ was presented to the church by Mr. H. H. Farnum.

Jan. 11, 1872, the Consistory made a call upon Rev.

Samuel J. Rogers, who became the ninth pastor, and entered upon his pastoral services Feb. 15, 1872, and was installed on April 2d, the Rev. S. W. Mills preaching at his installation. Mr. Rogers was educated at New Brunswick, graduating from Rutgers College in 1859, and from the theological seminary in 1862. He remained the pastor of this church until the second Sabbath in May, 1876. Upon leaving here he accepted a call from the Reformed Church in Fort Plain, N. Y. During his ministry here an extensive religious interest existed in the congregation, in the winter of 1875 and 1876, when 39 persons were added to the church upon confession at one communion. The number received during his pastorate was 93.

After the departure of Mr. Rogers the pulpit was supplied by various ministers, but chiefly by the Rev. Abraham Thompson, who, during a period of over three months, preached to the congregation to their general acceptance and profit. Nov. 17, 1876, the Consistory extended a call to Rev. Henry M. Voorhees, the tenth pastor, who commenced his pastoral services in March, 1877, and was installed May 10th of the same year, the Rev. L. L. Comfort preaching the installation sermon.

During this pastorate a debt of $10,000 (incurred chiefly by exchange of parsonage at the time of erecting the new church and by improvements connected therewith, and in putting an iron fence in front of the church) was reduced to $2000, and a beautiful chapel added, supplying a want long felt.

During the past twenty years the contributions of this church to objects of benevolence, as reported to General Synod, have amounted to $20,671.66, or an average of a little over $1000 per year.*

Rev. Mr. Voorhees resigned his charge by reason of ill health on December, 1878, and the eleventh pastor, Rev. Goyn Talmage, was installed June 17, 1879.

There appears to be no record of the names of the constituent members who formed the church in 1737, as they are not given either in the above historical address, nor in the translation of the records made a few years since by Rev. J. B. Ten Eyck, and published by W. H. Nearpass.† The present Consistory (1880) comprises four elders, J. P. Muir, Thomas J. Bonnell, William H. Nearpass, and D. L. Mapes; and deacons, Darius Rhodes, C. F. Van Inwegen, E. M. Gardon. The present clerk is D. S. Mapes. Two Sunday-schools are maintained,—the main one in the chapel, the other at Carpenter's Point.

* During this same period $93,348 have been given for congregational purposes, viz.: minister's salary, incidental expenses, erection of and repairs to church edifices, etc. Of the amount contributed previously for either benevolent or congregational purposes little is known, as no account of them has been kept by church officers and no report made to General Synod. Reports of collections for benevolent objects by churches were first made in 1853, and for congregational purposes in 1858, but only by a part of the churches for some years.

† Mr. Nearpass, besides being the publisher, translated a portion of the old records himself.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF PORT JERVIS executed a certificate of incorporation July 15, 1851. The proceedings were signed by E. A. Beckwith and Henry Caskey. The trustees chosen were Samuel B. Farnum, Francis I. Marvin, Theodore Barculo, Mortimer S. Brown, John M. Rowley, and Henry Cox. The following additional particulars are furnished by the pastor:

The First Presbyterian Church of Port Jervis was organized by the Presbytery of Hudson, June 2, 1851. There were 31 members enrolled as charter members of the church. A goodly number at this time. At this date, 1880, one of the original elders remains, Mr. William S. Cort, and one private member, Mrs. Susan Beckwith. Rev. Augustus Seward was the first pastor, who was largely instrumental in making the enterprise a success, and who served the church about eight years. Of the original board of trustees one still survives, and still has his place in the church, Mr. S. B. Farnum. A building was erected within a year, costing then about $5000, and was dedicated to Almighty God during the holidays of 1852-53, Rev. Asa D. Smith, D.D., of New York City, preaching the sermon.

The original Session were Ephraim A. Beckwith, Henry Caskey, William S. Cook, Ira Dales, M.D. The board of trustees were John M. Rowley, Francis I. Marvin, Samuel B. Farnum, Henry A. Cox, Theodore Barculo, Mortimer S. Brown.

The pastors have been Augustus Seward, about eight years; James T. Mathews, a supply, six months; Livingston Willard, installed in August, 1860,—serving about a year. In 1862, Rev. E. R. Fairchild, of the Presbytery of Hudson, took charge of the church, and served it as supply nearly five years. In March, 1867, Rev. A. P. Botsford, of the Presbytery of New York, was called, and installed in June following. He remains the pastor at this time,—September, 1880.

The members added to the church during the first pastorate—that of Rev. Augustus Seward—were 109. Those dismissed were 42; those deceased, 7; leaving a membership of about 100. The roll remained the same until 1862, when, under the labors of Rev. E. N. Fairchild, D.D., 127 were added to the church. During the present pastorate, running over a period of thirteen years, that of Rev. A. P. Botsford, the church building has been enlarged and remodeled, and re-furnished, a fine $3000 organ provided, a parsonage bought, at an expense of about $15,000. Besides this, the church has contributed for benevolence in the last ten years $6000, and for congregational purposes about $40,000. During this pastorate there have been large ingatherings of members on three different occasions,—March 1st there were added 50 persons; in December, 1875, and March, 1876, 72 new members were enrolled. In the thirteen years closing April, 1880, 328 new members have been added. The present number on the roll, 325; Sabbath-school scholars, 200. The church has no debt upon it, and its income fully meets its expenses.

THE SEPARATE AMERICAN METHODIST CHURCH OF PORT JERVIS executed a certificate of incorporation May 9, 1870, and the following board of trustees were sworn to execute their office to the best of their ability, viz.: Moses O. Brierson, Henry Wills, Francis Lawrence, Francis James, and Edwin Van Horn. This church, now called the Little Wesley chapel, was founded in 1852 by a preacher belonging to the Separate Methodist Congregational Church, which had its origin in the city of Philadelphia, by the name of G. W. Harden. Mr. Harden began to preach among the colored people of Port Jervis in the beginning of 1852, and continued his labors there until the spring of 1853, when a society was organized consisting of nine or ten members, and most of them resided in log houses quite remote from the village. The meetings were mostly held in private houses for some time, but as the number of the members continued to increase, and as the colored population in the place became more numerous every year, the worship in private houses became more impracticable, and therefore efforts began to be made in the year 1857 or 1858 to purchase a lot on which a house of worship might be erected, but nothing was accomplished in the matter until the year 1868, when a small plot of ground was purchased of Mrs. Scott, near the Delaware and Hudson Canal, where the church now stands, on which a building was partially erected in the fall and winter of that year.

THE SPARROWBUSH UNION FREE CHURCH, TOWN OF DEERPARK, effected a legal organization May 31, 1871. The associated incorporators signing the certificate were Jonathan West, John R. Patterson, Robert Lewis, John J. Bross, J. C. West, William J. Darragh, and William Lewis. Religious services have been held in the house erected usually every Sunday from the incorporation to the present time. At the present time the meetings are under the management of the Methodist Church.

GRACE CHURCH OF PORT JERVIS (EPISCOPAL) executed a certificate of incorporation Sept. 5, 1853. The proceedings were signed by Samuel Fowler and Wm. Mills. The wardens chosen were Uriah Mills and Samuel Fowler; the vestrymen were Thomas J. Lyon, L. Tooker, John P. Fowler, A. Hoffman, A. Turner, B. S. Hall, Elias Lafarge, T. N. Coleman.

The meeting was held at the Presbyterian church, where the Episcopalians were then worshipping.

The next spring, April 27, 1854, the society deemed it best to record a new article of incorporation, in which appear the names of Thomas J. Lyon, Elias Lafarge, Charles B. Hornby, Samuel Fowler, Uri Mills, Alexander Turner, Thomas J. Lye, Thomas Walsh, John P. Fowler, Benjamin Hall, Thomas N. Coleman, A. Kophman.

The following article, furnished by the officers of the church, gives additional particulars:

The parish of Grace Church has little of historical incident to interest the public. The missionary effort which was made at this place some twenty years ago, after a series of reverses, was wholly abandoned, and of the communicants all but some half a dozen were scattered or removed to other places. In the year 1867 the clergy of the several parishes of the Episcopal Church in the county formed a missionary association under the name of "The Convention of Orange County." Several members of the convention soon after visited Port Jervis, and after consultation with two or three of the communicants still resident in the village, determined to employ a clergyman and to begin the missionary work afresh in this beautiful and growing village. The few remaining communicants and friends of the church cordially welcomed the project of renewing the missionary work. The Rev. John Appleton was invited to the post, and in the autumn of 1867 entered upon his duties as missionary. Westbrook Hall was rented, and services were held in it for some four years. In the mean time the members of the parish bought of Mr. Henry Farnum a lot on which to erect a church, and for which they agreed to pay $2500. In the spring of 1871 the Rev. Mr. Appleton was compelled, by the loss of his health, to resign his charge of the mission.

The Rev. F. N. Luson was then called, and entered soon after upon the work. Mr. Luson succeeded at once in enlisting the hearty co-operation of both the ladies and gentlemen of the parish in the endeavor to build a church, and by dint of the most untiring and persistent effort on the part of the rector and his zealous helpers, both male and female, in the face of many difficulties and discouragements, in about four years the present church edifice was completed, at a cost of some $16,000. At the close of the year 1874 the Rev. Mr. Luson resigned his charge of the parish and removed to the diocese of Illinois, and on the 1st of February, 1875, the Rev. J. G. Rosencrantz, an assistant minister of St. James' Church, Brooklyn, L. I., was called, and entered upon the rectorship of the parish. With unabated zeal the little company of faithful workers entered afresh with their new rector upon their task, and during his residence of five years Mr. Rosencrantz was not only enabled to present about one hundred candidates for confirmation, and to report nearly a hundred persons added to the list of communicants, but during the time he was also permitted to see the floating debt of the parish paid off and canceled. In January, 1880, Mr. Rosencrantz resigned his charge and removed to Port Chester, Westchester Co., N. Y., and the Rev. Alex. Capron entered on the 1st of February upon the rectorship.

On its roll of nearly one hundred families at the present time the parish embraces some of the most prominent and influential people of the village, and reports between 140 and 150 communicants, and the parish is therefore in the very dew and vigor of its youth, and on the part of both rector and people, looking forward hopefully and confidently to gathering many souls into the fold of the Good Shepherd.

DREW CENTENNIAL METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF PORT JERVIS.

Of the founding of this society and its early history the accounts are gathered from several of the oldest residents of the valley yet living; and as no record was kept, so far as we now know, the facts are related from memory, and therefore definite dates cannot always be stated. The chronological order of the history may not be entirely accurate, still the facts are placed in the best possible order from memory. During the war of 1812-14 a Mr. Hunt worked at the glass-factory, situated in Pennsylvania, just across the Delaware River from "Boydville" (now known as "Honesville" and "Sparrowbush"), and which was then in full operation. Mr. Hunt was a Methodist preacher, and preached every Sabbath,—sometimes in a grove, or at the house of John Patterson at Boydville, at Carpenter's Point, and at the house of Leo Gegce, at "Gegce's Mill" (now called Huguenot). Mr. Hunt was a very earnest and withal an acceptable preacher, and did much good, though by some considered very singular, because, while his fellow-workmen in the glass-factory worked Sabbaths when the glass was at full heat for blowing, he would not work on Sabbath, but spent his time in preaching and other religious duties, thereby losing the pay he would have received had he worked with the rest. The Methodists living in the vicinity at that time were few. Among them were Joseph Chattle and a Mr. Carpenter, at Carpenter's Point, Leo Gegce, Polly Bingham, and Sally Hornbeck, at or near Gegce's Mill, and other members of each family named; also a few others whose names are not now known lived in the neighborhood. After the close of the war work at the glass-house ceased. Mr. Hunt removed, and we lose sight of him. Soon after he left the late Rev. Bartholomew Weed moved to Milford to work at his trade as a blacksmith. He had been licensed by the society as an exhorter in 1812. He preached at Milford, Pa., and at Carpenter's Point. About 1816-17 four Methodist families—Heman Benedict, Timothy Bouton, Mr. Bridges, and Mr. Reed—moved from Connecticut and settled near Cahoongie. All these families were prominent and earnest workers in the society. Some time about 1818 Mr. Cummings, the third Methodist preacher, moved into the valley. He had six preaching-places,—at the school-house at Gegce's Mill; in the red school-house on the Peenpack road (now known as Kingston Avenue, Port Jervis); at the house of Martin Decker, then situate near where Mr. Penny's hotel now stands, or near the junction of Main and Pike Streets, Port Jervis; at "Stoddard's," near Greenville; at the house of Mr. Bridges, at Cahoongie; and at the house of John Patterson, at Boydville.

Mr. Cummings was very much liked by the people; they came from all around the thinly-settled country to hear him preach at his various appointments, and especially when about to remove, he preached his farewell sermon in a large barn belonging to Martin Decker, and which then stood near where the residence of Mr. G. Malvin is now located, on Delaware Street, Port Jervis. About 1820 a Mr. Henvender preached in the valley, at, probably, the same places as his predecessors. From that time until about 1826 we have very slight information of the society or its workings in the valley, though they continued to have preachers and held meetings, and we learn that prior to 1826 they held camp-meetings at the "Camp-Ground" (now known as "the Coal-Switch"), between Port Jervis and Sparrowbush. In 1826, Lee & Collins had a contract for building a section of the Delaware and Hudson Canal, at the "Pine woods," near the present village, which had about that time been named "Port Jervis" in honor of J. B. Jervis, Esq., the civil engineer on the canal. Lee and Collins were both Methodist preachers, and preached at various places in the valley (regularly in a large boarding-house situated near where Mr. Charles Buckley now resides). The following Methodist preachers were stationed at or near Port Jervis between 1820 and 1838, though the order in which they are placed here may not be strictly accurate: Wm. M. Bloomer, with John McDougall, assistant; Wm. Baker, and Vincent Sheperd, assistant; Oliver Bagley, and Jonah Bisey, assistant; Bromwell Andrew, J. M. Tuttle and Wesley C. Hudson, assistants; Washington Thomas, and Peter D. Day, John Bagley, Wm. Baker (second time), Isaac Truit, Henry Maines, John W. Pierson. In 1828, Stephen Best, a very earnest Christian and a Methodist, had a regularly organized class under his charge, with the following as some of the members: Joseph Chattle and some members of his family, a colored woman known as "Aunt Fillisie," and her daughter; there were several others whose names we cannot learn. In 1832 a revival occurred, and John D. Carpenter, with several members of his family, were converted and joined the society. Mr. Carpenter at once became a very active worker. He organized a Sabbath-school, acting as superintendent himself, and furnishing books, etc., for the school, which met first at the house of his father, Benjamin Carpenter, near where Mr. C. Buckley now resides; afterwards in a building near the "Jersey line," at "the Point." Mr. Carpenter soon purchased the tavern at "The Ferry," near where the present "Suspension Bridge" now stands, at Carpenter's Point, and rented it to Samuel Harris, a member of the society, for a dwelling, but reserved the bar-room, which he cleared out and arranged for a place to hold meetings in, and which for some time was the headquarters of the society in the neighborhood.

Some time in 1832, Mr. Best removed to Butler's Lock, near Mongaup, and Mr. Carpenter took charge of the class. We find the numbers had largely increased, and we find among them James Lupton and his wife, Mary Mapes, Mrs. Huntsman and a sister, George Rosecrance and wife, Samuel Harris and his wife, Charlotte (yet living in 1880). The society continued to meet in the "tavern room," in the red school-house on the Peenpack road, and at various dwellings until about 1838, when it had grown so large that a regular organization was made by the appointment of Stephen St. John, Simeon M. Stoddard, John D. Carpenter, James Lupton, and Gilbert F. Mondon as trustees for the society, then styled "The First Methodist Episcopal Church of Port Jervis, N. Y.," and on the 22d day of October, 1838, the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company donated a lot near the canal for church purposes. The society soon completed a neat frame church on the lot. The late John Bonker, a member of the society, worked on the building, and when completed he built the first fire and lighted the first candle in the new church.

At the dedication, which took place in 1838 or 1839, the Rev. Mr. Kennedy, then stationed at Newburgh, officiated, assisted by Manning Force, Peter D. Day, and a Mr. Dunning. The following ministers preached for the society between 1838 and 1850: T. J. Lyon, a Mr. Smith, Wm. Burroughs, Wm. Wiggins, John D. Blain, Henry Beagle, Edward P. Cook, Fletcher Lummis, and Charles S. Coit. In 1850, Port Jervis Methodist Episcopal Church had grown largely, and was the central church of the circuit, with Huguenot, Honesville, Cahoongie, Mongaup, and several outside appointments, where the "Port Jervis preacher held meetings."

The following ministers were stationed at Port Jervis between 1850 and 1864: Thomas H. Smith, Martin Herr, Joseph R. Adams, George B. Day, T. H. Landon, John Faull, David Walters, and John Coit. Prior to 1864 the congregation had grown so large that the first church would not accommodate them, and a new and more convenient site was desired, as the new and rapid growth of the village had left the church out on one side. After several years of effort the present site was purchased, and a new brick church, 55 by 95 feet, with slate roof, and spire 162 feet high, was projected. In 1866, when the new structure was commenced, the following were the officers of the church: Rev. George F. Dickinson, preacher; Trustees, L. E. Elston, president; Wm. Hammond, secretary; James R. Harrison, treasurer; Moses Macomber, and Gabriel D. Corwin; Building Committee, George F. Dickinson, Henry Dutcher, Aaron Decker, Daniel Romaine, and L. E. Elston; Stewards, Lemuel E. Elston, D. Romaine, John T. Burkard, Gabriel D. Corwin, Andrew J. Snyder, John Badger, and Charles S. Goodale; Recording and District Steward, L. E. Elston; Superintendent of the Sunday-school, L. E. Elston.

The corner-stone for the new church was laid Nov. 11, 1866, with appropriate ceremonies, and the building was completed and dedicated March 7 and 8, 1868, Bishop E. S. Janes officiating, assisted by Dr. L. Dashiell and other prominent ministers and laymen. The church has a fine audience-room, with large Sunday-school and class-rooms. A special act was passed by the Legislature March 23, 1867, changing the title of the society from "The First Methodist Episcopal Church of Port Jervis" to "The Drew Centennial Methodist Episcopal Church of Port Jervis, N. Y." The following preachers have been stationed at Port Jervis since 1866: George F. Dickinson, C. S. Van Cleve, John I. Morrow, Benjamin Kelly, A. R. Shaw, John A. Munroe, Dr. J. T. Crane, and William E. Blakeslee, the present preacher, appointed April, 1880. Rev. B. Kelly died at Port Jervis in 1874, while pastor of the church; and Rev. Dr. J. T. Crane died February, 1880, while pastor. The church now has over 600 members, a Sabbath-school of 414 scholars and 42 officers and teachers. The present officers are as follows: Stewards, L. E. Elston (district and recording steward), James L. Crawford, Stephen S. Starr, H. W. Palmer, William Dexter Stuart, Daniel Romaine, Isaac B. Smith, Job M. Snell, and Jonathan Corey; Superintendent of Sabbath-school, L. E. Elston; Trustees, George E. Cook, president; A. J. Snyder, secretary; Horace Hammond, treasurer; James L. Crawford, Charles Wells, A. P. Macdonald, Moses W. Perry, L. D. Mathews, and George H. Langton.

The church stands on the corner of Broom and Sussex Streets, on Orange Square, in a position to be seen from nearly all parts of the village, affording an excellent location for the town clock in the tower, and which was presented to the village by Mrs. Mary Shorter on her seventieth birthday, April 13, 1878.

It will be seen by the above brief sketch that, in about sixty-eight years, the society has grown from perhaps not over a half-dozen members in 1812 to over 600 in 1880, and from the hospitable shelter of some grove or dwelling to a large church property worth about $50,000, and which will accommodate nearly 1000 persons.

THE REFORMED CHURCH OF CUDDEBACKVILLE, at a meeting held in the school-house, Nov. 26, 1853, executed a certificate of incorporation. The proceedings were signed by Hiram Slauson, Lewis Cuddeback, and Samuel Gordon. The trustees chosen were Moses Van Inwegen, William Cuddeback, William C. Roe, Ezekiel R. Gumaer, Lewis Cuddeback, William Littell, and Alexander Gordon. The petition to Classis for organization was dated Jan. 31, 1854, and signed by forty-three persons. A committee of Classis, consisting of Rev. H. Slauson, Rev. S. Searle, Rev. C. D. Elting, and Elders Philip Swartwout and John N. Taylor, constituted the church on the second Sabbath in March, 1854. The first members were William C. Rose and wife, Garret D. Sullivan and wife, Adam Stickle and wife, Solomon Van Etten and wife, Mrs. Esther Van Inwegen, Mrs. Margaret Hopson, Mrs. Mary Case, Miss Margaret Cuddeback, and William Littell. The first elders were William C. Rose and William Littell; Deacons, Garrett D. Sullivan, Adam Stickle; Chairman of Consistory, William C. Rose; and Clerk, William Littell. C. L. Norris has been clerk and treasurer of the congregation from the formation of the church to the present time. The successive ministers have been Rev. Henry Morris, March 22, 1855, to Oct. 12, 1862; Rev. Egbert Winter, May 11, 1863, to Jan. 9, 1866; Rev. Jeremiah L. Zabriskie, March 27, 1866, to June 7, 1870; Rev. W. E. Bogardus, Aug. 16, 1870, to March 23, 1874; Rev. John DuBois, May 22, 1874, commenced his labors June 1, and is the present pastor, November, 1880. The present Consistory is composed of Stoddard Van Inwegen, George W. Rhodes, Charles H. Norris, Isaac Van Inwegen, elders; F. A. Quick, William Taylor, deacons. Stoddard Van Inwegen is superintendent of the Sunday-school. An out-appointment is regularly filled at Huguenot, and occasionally at other points. The house of worship was erected at an expense of $3300 in 1853, before the church was organized.

THE GERMAN LUTHERAN PROTESTANT CHURCH OF PORT JERVIS was incorporated Jan. 1, 1861. The certificate was signed by Jacob Goëby and Matthew Heoyman. The trustees chosen were Michael Seegar, Matthew Heisman, John Bosh, Henry Stadermayer. The present pastor furnishes the following additional particulars:

The First German Evangelical Lutheran (St. Peter's) congregation was organized by Rev. August Schubert, Sept. 18, 1859. He labored till May 26, 1860, preaching in Brown's Hall. Members who constituted the first assemblage and are yet connected with it are Fred Ehrenfeuthter, M. Seeger, F. Seeger, F. Lang, M. Heitzmann, J. Pfizner, C. Wiegand.

Under the pastorate of P. J. Goetz, a church building was erected of frame in 1863. It is yet in a good condition. On the 1st of April, 1869, P. Goetz resigned, and P. J. Bockstahler was called. In 1872 the present parsonage was built.

Nov. 1, 1873, P. Kuhn was called, and is still today officiating. Every Sunday afternoon the Sunday-school is held, with an attendance of about 100 scholars.

Pastor, Hugo B. Kuhn; 7 elders and trustees; 65 members in good standing, and 200 communicants.

The house of worship was dedicated Oct. 12, 1862. It is a plain, neat, substantial structure, standing near the Delaware River. The lot was the gift of Mr. H. H. Farnum. The edifice cost $1700.

THE PORT JERVIS BAPTIST CHURCH

executed a certificate of incorporation April 28, 1862. The certificate was signed by Thomas Cuddeback and John W. Decker. The trustees named were Peter Mulhearn, John W. Decker, Thomas Montanye, Charles B. Gray, and Thomas Cuddeback. The church dates back many years earlier than the date above given. It was organized November, 1838, by a Council convened in the Dutch Reformed church. The following is a list of the constituent members: Gilbert F. Mondon, Nehemiah L. Mondon, Samuel Patterson, David Decker, Joseph Gibson, Catharine S. Mondon, Nancy I. Pierson, Pamela Birdsall, Catharine Malcolm, Mary Ellen Mondon, Lydia Gumaer, Jane Rhodes, Elizabeth Thompson, Jane Gumaer, Jane Beebe, Sally Decker.

The first deacons of the church were G. F. Mondon, D. Decker. The first house of worship was built on the banks of the canal, on ground given by the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company. This having become too small, the present structure was erected on Pike Street in 1868. The first pastoral service was rendered by Rev. William H. Turton.

The following is a list of pastors and their terms of service: W. H. Turton, 1838-39; Samuel Barrett, 1839-42; David Bennet, 1843-45; D. F. Leach, 1845-50; J. E. Reynolds, 1850-51; Isaac Lawton, 1851-52; R. Bently, 1852-53; — Hancock, 1853-54; A. K. Perkins, 1854-55; Zelotes Grenell, 1855-61; William I. Gill, 1862-64; C. I. Thompson, 1864-65; H. S. Loyd, 1865-69; T. J. B. House, 1869-70; William McKinney, 1871-80; Alex. MacArthur, 1880.

The organization at present consists of 250 members. Names of officers are as follows: Pastor, Rev. Alexander MacArthur; Deacons, Horace K. Stewart, Jeremiah Mead, Nehemiah L. Mondon, Augustus W. Balch, Cornelius G. Lockwood; Treasurer, A. W. Balch; Clerk, N. L. Mondon; Trustees, Mortimer Crawford, Augustus W. Balch, James Springsteen, William Sheppard, Cornelius G. Lockwood.

The Sunday-school is under the vigorous superintendency of C. G. Lockwood.

THE CHURCH OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION (CATHOLIC)

of Port Jervis was incorporated Jan. 10, 1860. The certificate was signed by Francis D. Murphy and Dominick Cuniff. The trustees named therein were Hugh McGovern, Peter Higgins, and James Creenagas.

This church filed a second certificate of incorporation May 16, 1869, and the trustees named therein were Rev. John McCloskey, archbishop; Rev. Wm. Starr, vicar-general; Rev. James Nilan, pastor; and two laymen, Peter Higgins, Peter Gillem. The successive pastors of this church have been Rev. Fathers Briardy, R. R. Brennan, Rev. James Nilan, and the present pastor is Rev. E. J. Flynn; the assistant pastor, Rev. Father Sally. The first regular house of worship was erected under Father Briardy's labors. It stood on the site of the present edifice, the corner-stone of which was laid July 5, 1869. A parchment was placed in the corner-stone bearing the following record:

"To God Almighty in the year of our Lord 1869, on the fifth day of the month of July, the ninety-third anniversary of American Independence, being celebrated with due honor in the twenty-third year of the Pontificate of Pope Pius IX. Most Rev. John McCloskey, D.D., Archbishop of New York; Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States; John T. Hoffman, Governor of the State of New York, this corner-stone of a church being erected in honor of Almighty God under the title of the Virgin Mary conceived without sin, patroness of this Republic, Rev. E. McGlynn, D.D., being the orator of the occasion, was blessed and laid by Rev. James Nilan, Pastor."

The church is 133 by 65 feet; two spires 100 and 180 feet high. Mr. Perry was the architect. The building committee were Domine Cunningham, James Creegan, Peter Higgins, Andrew Cuff, Daniel Young. The mason-work was done by Patrick Herbert, of Newburgh, for $39,400; the carpenter-work by S. W. Hotchkiss, of Port Jervis, for $16,200.

For the old church ground was broken June 18, 1854, and the edifice was completed in 1855. The style of the architecture was Gothic. The dimensions were 55 feet front and 83 deep. It had a tower, and was altogether a handsome edifice. It was burned during the Christmas festivities of 1868.

REV. E. J. FLYNN.—The present pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Rev. E. J. Flynn, was born in the parish of St. Stephen's, New York City, in 1846. The Rev. Dr. Cummings, recognizing in the young man indications of a divine vocation to the priesthood, advised his youthful friend to enter college and perfect himself in a course of classical study. After a short study of the Latin language he was sent to the college of the Propaganda at Rome. Under the careful guidance of the venerable Father Smith of the Urban College, who discovered in his American student a career of future usefulness, directed with much interest his theological studies, and in 1871 Father Flynn was ordained a priest. His first mission was at St. Stephen's, where in early youth he had officiated as an altar boy. For two years he labored under the instruction and guidance of Rev. Father McGlynn, and in 1873 was assigned the assistant pastorate of St. Andrew's. There he also labored faithfully, giving much of his time to the instruction of the young Italians who resided in the parish.

His next field was that of St. Theresa, where he became endeared to the people by his kindness to the poor and his unremitting attentions to the sick and dying. On his retirement from this parish, a valuable testimonial was presented him by the members as an expression of their personal regard.

Father Flynn became the pastor of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Port Jervis, in November, 1877. On his arrival a burdensome debt of $59,000 had oppressed the congregation, to the liquidation of which he at once devoted himself. Through his untiring zeal, in the space of two years the sum of $20,635 had been paid, and the dimensions of the parish considerably enlarged. A decided spiritual growth was also evinced within its borders. The church property was soon after improved, the amount of $3000 having been expended for the purpose.

Father Flynn, while an exemplary and laborious pastor, has found time to devote to the interests of the community of which he is a member. He has established a reputation as a public-spirited citizen, ever ready by word and deed to assist in the development of projects having for their aim the welfare of the city and the good of its inhabitants. This has made him deservedly popular with all classes, irrespective of creed, and placed his name upon the roll of representative citizens of Port Jervis, his present home.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

THE OLD GUMAER GRAVEYARD is the first one to note in order of time. Indeed, there can be none in the county where burials took place earlier, unless it be in the vicinity of Plum Point, on the Hudson. If the Cuddeback settlement was not quite as early as claimed, yet there is ample proof that the usual accounts are not far from correct.

If the descendants of those pioneers will carefully examine the old burial-place, remove the gathered mass of leaves, and trace the dim inscriptions upon the old field-stone, some of them doubtless covered up entirely, it is very possible that still earlier dates can be obtained than those given below, which were secured by only an hour's examination.

At the place known as Paradise, on the borders of Sullivan County, there is a burial-ground, in the Case and Decker neighborhood. At Sparrowbush there is a burial-place located north of the village.

THE OLD BURIAL-PLACE OF PORT JERVIS.

This is the one historic graveyard of the southern section of the town, and deserves better care than it appears to be receiving. Its broken fences, its neglected grounds, cut to pieces by private driveways over a part of it, its fallen stones, all tell a story of neglect unworthy of the place, and unworthy of an age when money is freely lavished upon the new cemeteries.

Among its broken stones may be traced some early dates, as 1758, 1766. In some of the almost illegible records there may be the date of birth. The following are more clear:

"Died in the year 1789 August 20 S Desour"

Sarah Caskey departed this life
July the 27th 1796"

The first date is that of birth.

"April 1 1865

Jacob Nearpass died aged 90 years."

This yard is located on Main Street next to the Catholic cemetery. North of the burial-place stood the old Reformed church, towards the residence of Charles F. Van Inwegen. The burials undoubtedly date back many years before the Revolution.

LAUREL GROVE CEMETERY.

This occupies the extreme southeastern part of the corporation, being the point of land between the Neversink and the Delaware Rivers. It consists of about thirty acres. A marked peculiarity of this cemetery is its exclusive use of evergreens for adornment, both in the saving of the original forest-trees and in the setting out and cultivation of others. Indeed, upon the cemetery grounds (not including the banks of the streams) there are only two deciduous trees left, and it is intended to remove these. In the more closely cultivated portions there are some fine specimens of trimming in peculiar forms, attracting the special attention of visitors.

The name Laurel Grove is appropriate from the original thick, tangled growth of rhododendrons and a small species of laurel that covered the tract. In some parts this has not yet been cut away entirely. The cemetery was founded in 1856 by John Conkling, who was the owner of the ground. He devoted the same to burial purposes very much upon his own responsibility, though a legal organization was effected, and a joint arrangement made between him and the board of trustees with reference to the sale of lots. It has remained under his management from that time to the present. There are now many valuable lots handsomely arranged and adorned with fine monuments. In walks and driveways it is all that can be desired. It will doubtless form the principal burial-place of the future for Port Jervis and vicinity.

The meeting to organize was held Sept. 21, 1855, James Bennett, chairman, and Thomas Cuddeback, secretary. The trustees named in the certificate of incorporation were John Conkling, Henry H. Farnum, William H. Power, Augustus B. Goodale, James Bennett, Samuel Fowler, James H. Mondon, John M. Heller, Zephaniah Birdsall. The first officers chosen were John Conkling, president; Augustus P. Thompson, treasurer; William H. Power, secretary. The dedication took place July 15, 1856, when addresses were delivered by Rev. Augustus Seward, Rev. E. S. Briardy, Rev. Mr. Slauson, and Rev. Mr. Adams.

Mr. Conkling has been president from the first. The other officers (November, 1880) are Zephaniah Birdsall, vice-president; Peter E. Farnum, secretary; Wade Buckley, treasurer. The board of trustees consists of John Conkling, Zephaniah Birdsall, Solomon Van Etten, A. B. Goodale, A. H. Peck, David Westfall, David Bennett, Lyman O. Rose, John L. Bonnell.

THE WEEPING WILLOW CEMETERY ASSOCIATION OF PORT JERVIS was organized May 26, 1857. The meeting was held at the office of O. Young. Samuel H. Mills was appointed chairman, and O. Young, secretary. The trustees chosen were John Clark, Charles St. John, O. Young, Philip Lee, Thomas Cuddeback, Solomon Van Etten. The proceedings were verified on the 27th by the officers before H. H. Steward, justice of the peace, and recorded May 28, 1857. This is really the St. John burial-ground in the rear of the school-house on Main Street, adjoining the Reformed church.

THE REFORMED CHURCH CEMETERY is of modern date, and near to the present house of worship; opened at the time of the erection of the house of worship, in 1833.

CATHOLIC CEMETERY.

This ground is handsomely situated in the southeast part of the corporation, bordering on the Neversink. The portion next to Main Street is closely filled, but a large unoccupied part lies between this and the river. A few lots are taken up and monuments erected near the stream. The grading of lots and the arrangement of walks has received considerable attention. Some repairs needed in fences, and additional care of lots and walks, will doubtless be given to this ground as fast as the energetic church to which it belongs may be able to give attention to these details.

RURAL VALLEY CEMETERY ASSOCIATION, town of Deerpark, was formed at a meeting held on the 27th of April, 1867. William Westfall was chosen chairman, and William Mapes, secretary. The trustees named were Harmanus Cuddeback, Benjamin Cuddeback, Lyman O. Rose, Job Van Inwegen, E. S. Norris, William Mapes, William Westfall. The proceedings were verified April 29th by the officers before Wm. Rankin, justice of the peace, and recorded May 6th. The grounds of this association constitute the modern burial-place at Cuddebackville, and are in good preservation.

USTAYANTHA LODGE, No. 143, I. O. OF O. F, PORT JERVIS, was instituted Sept. 8, 1849. Its number was 390. The lodge met in a building that stood where part of Creegan's brick block now is. The charter members were William H. Stewart, Austin Hough, Erastus Slauson, Ira Dale, John B. Crawford, Thomas N. Coleman, D. P. H. Coleman, James Eastman, and O. E. Wheat. The first officers selected from these charter members were William H. Stewart, N. G.; Austin Hough, V. G.; Erastus Slauson, Sec.; Ira Dale, Treas.; O. E. Wheat, G. The lodge continued to meet in the same room until 1852, when it was moved to Conkling's Hall, on Main Street, which was fitted up expressly for them. There the lodge met until 1861, when, on the erection of St. John's Block, corner of Pike and Main Streets, a contract was made with Mr. St. John to fit the upper rooms for them and they moved in. The entrance was then on Main Street. This was continued until 1872, when an addition was erected to the building, and the entrance was changed to Pike Street. The arrangement of the rooms is now very complete, and all about them are truly elegant.

This lodge was No. 390 until the union of the northern and southern divisions of the State, a few years ago, when it was renumbered and has since been known as No. 143. It is a child of Middletown Lodge, No. 112. In turn it is called "mother-lodge" by no less than four lodges and one encampment. The children of the "mother-lodge" are the Stillo, No. 209, a German lodge, which meets in the same room; Adelphi, No. 240, at Cohecton; Vandermark, No. 828, at Milford, Pa.; Neversink, No. 358, at Carpenter's Point; and Deepark Encampment, No. 46, which holds its meeting in the same room with its mother. During its entire history the lodge has had great prosperity. Harmony has prevailed. Love, Friendship, and Truth have displayed their beauty here, and crowned our efforts with success.

This lodge has disbursed for charitable purposes alone $16,000 here in the village and vicinity quietly. This amount of money must have relieved many families who would have suffered without it. This lodge has now in its treasury $4000 properly invested.

The following are the names of the Noble Grands of the lodge since its organization: W. H. Stewart, W. T. Bodle, Soverine Bennett, S. C. Martenes, Ira Dale, Francis Stanton, Charles S. King, Thomas L. Coleman, R. C. Van Brunt, Philip Lee, James N. Penny, Charles St. John, J. Headden, John M. Ridgeway, Daniel Romaine, M. C. The council has received during its organization over $2000, and has paid out for sick benefits over $800. It now has a membership of 40, who are paying over $250 into the treasury yearly. It is the oldest council in the State of New York, many of those who took numbers before it having surrendered their charter or been reorganized.

ORANGE COUNTY BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION.

The association was organized July 29, 1875, with the following charter members: Walter Harvey, M. H. Finn, Thomas H. Branch, Harry Karslake, William Whithead, Robert Taylor, George E. Branch, John Medrick, Daniel Stewart. The first officers elected were as follows, to serve from Aug. 1, 1875, to Aug. 1, 1876: For President, Walter Harvey; Vice-President, Harry Karslake; Treasurer, Jacob Iobe; and Secretary, T. H. Branch. The first collection of money was Aug. 1, 1875, upon 179 shares.

Officers elected to serve from Aug. 1, 1876, to Aug. 1, 1877: President, Walter Harvey; Vice-President, W. L. Carmichael; Treasurer, Jacob Iobe; and Secretary, Thomas H. Branch.

To serve from Aug. 1, 1877, to Aug. 1, 1878, as follows: President, James Porritt; Vice-President, James Nyce; Treasurer, Jacob Iobe; and Secretary, Thomas H. Branch. But after the election of officers for this year the treasurer died, whereupon William H. Nearpass was elected to fill the vacancy.

Officers elected to serve from Aug. 1, 1878, to Aug. 1, 1879: President, James Porritt; Vice-President, H. C. Nichols; Treasurer, William H. Nearpass; and Secretary, Thomas H. Branch.

From Aug. 1, 1879, to Aug. 1, 1880: President, James Porritt; Vice-President, Thomas Laidley; Treasurer, William H. Nearpass; and Secretary, T. H. Branch; and at the next election the same officers were re-elected to serve till Aug. 1, 1881.

This association so far has done remarkably well, having now 808 shares, and securities to the amount of $43,000. It differs from most associations of this kind in that it issues stock every month, thereby giving persons a better chance of becoming members, and availing themselves of the money that is loaned every month, without being compelled to pay up back dues.

DEERPARK MINING COMPANY

was formed Nov. 14, 1864. Its principal places of business were stated to be the town of Deerpark, and also the City of New York. The trustees named all resided abroad. The objects were stated to be "the mining of lead ores and other minerals." The proceedings were recorded Jan. 27, 1865.

Baldwin, trustees. The capital stock was stated at $125,000, fully paid in, of which the sum of $31,000 had been paid as purchase money for the mill and real estate of said company, and the remainder in cash.

THE DEERPARK LEAD COMPANY.

Under date of Feb. 6, 1866, Washington G. Woodward, president, and C. H. Southard, A. W. Davey, and Cornelius Fiske, constituting a majority of trustees, filed a statement in the county clerk's office that the capital stock of said company is $750,000, divided into 300,000 shares of $2.50 each; that all of this has been issued for the purchase of property in the town of Mount Hope.

THE GERMAN ROMAN CATHOLIC ST. JOSEPH'S BENEVOLENT SOCIETY OF PORT JERVIS was organized under date March 31, 1877. Its objects were declared to be as follows: "To advance the welfare of its members by affording relief in sickness and aiding in the burial of deceased members, and in promoting each other's religious welfare."

The directors named were as follows: Anthony Schooner, president; Henry Minnick, vice-president; John G. Sauer, recording secretary; Charles Diemer, secretary of finance; Benjamin Hafner, treasurer; John Schruverger, Bernhard Lohman, Mich'l Reader, committee on finance; Henry Minnick, Benjamin Hafner, Ferdinand Hagle, Charles Diemer, Andsen Mayers, executive committee; John Mayer, John Rarg, banner bearers.

THE PORT JERVIS BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION, No. 1.

The Port Jervis Building and Loan Association, No. 1, was established June 1, 1868. Its object is the accumulation of a fund by monthly installments, premiums, interest on loans, fines, and forfeitures to enable stockholders to purchase real estate, erect buildings thereon, or invest in any manner they may deem most advantageous.

John Dutton was elected president, James Layton, vice-president; Richard Gray, treasurer; S. G. Cockendall, secretary.

In connection with the above officers there are twelve directors, three trustees, and three auditors, all of whom are elected by ballot on the third Wednesday of June of each year.

John Dutton remained president three years, and was succeeded by William H. Nearpass, who is still serving in that office (November, 1880).

Walter Harvey was vice-president the second year, and was succeeded by Jacob May, who served five years. In June, 1875, John B. Layton was chosen vice-president, and served one year. From 1876 to the present time Jacob May has filled that office.

Richard Gray remained treasurer two years. He was succeeded, June, 1870, by Jacob Pobe, who served until his death in 1877. July 24, 1877, Jacob Kadel was chosen treasurer, and is still serving in that capacity.

At the second election, June, 1869, M. F. Finn was chosen secretary, and served six years. June, 1875, Hiram W. Dewitt, the present secretary, was elected to that office.

From June 1, 1878, to June 1, 1879.....	18,482.95
From June 1, 1879, to June 1, 1880.....	19,928.74
Total.....	$255,014.77

Of this amount, $49,800 was from loans returned, leaving a net receipt of $205,214.77, or an average of $17,101.23 per year for twelve years.

THE DEERPARK AND WESTFALL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION was organized Jan. 29, 1872. The officers chosen were John Dutton, president; James Iliff, vice-president and treasurer; Samuel J. Wilson, secretary. Mr. Dutton has served as president until the present time (November, 1880). The present secretary, W. E. McCormick, succeeded Mr. Wilson in March, 1873. Richard Gray is the present treasurer, and Benjamin Ryall, Jr., vice-president.

The association has twelve "series." The first has been closed, its shares having matured according to the plan of these associations. The dues per month are one dollar and twenty-five cents, and the rate of interest six per cent.

THE DELAWARE BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION was organized July 1, 1872. The officers appointed were Walter Harvey, president; S. A. King, vice-president; Thomas H. Branch, secretary; James Porritt, treasurer.

This association comprised one series. The dues were two dollars per month, and the rate of interest six per cent. The association is now closing up its business, each share of stock having reached a par value of $200 April 28, 1879. The amount paid in on each share was $137, giving a profit to each stockholder of $63. The total receipts of the association were $37,200, and the average running expenses per year were only about $100. The present officers (November, 1880) are James Porritt, president; Walter Harvey, secretary; William H. Nearpass, treasurer.

THE NEVERSINK BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION was organized Oct. 1, 1872. The officers chosen were John Milligan, president; William J. Murphy, secretary; Andrew Cuff, treasurer.

The present officers (November, 1880) are Thomas McGuire, who succeeded Mr. Milligan in the office of president, June, 1874; William J. Murphy, secretary, who has served from the organization; William H. Nearpass, who succeeded Mr. Cuff in the office of treasurer, February, 1878; and S. A. J. Conklin, vice-president.

This association has one "series," and it is intended to close business when, according to the provisions of the charter, each share shall have become worth the par value of $200. The dues are one dollar per month, and the rate of interest six per cent. The amount paid in at the date of the last annual report was $91 per share, and the computed value of each share was $155.47, giving a profit of $64.47.

THE MUTUAL BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION was organized June 1, 1867. The officers chosen were C. E. Cuddeback, president; A. B. Wilbur, vice-president; H. C. Crawford, secretary; William H. Nearpass, treasurer.

They have remained in office to the present time. The association had only one "series." Its dues were two dollars per month, and rate of interest six per cent. According to the limitations of its charter, the association terminated on the 1st of December, 1880. At that date each share had become worth the par value of $200. Upon each share there had been paid in $152, giving a profit to the stockholders of $48 upon each share.

THE TRI-STATES MEDICAL SOCIETY has existed for about twenty years past, meeting at Port Jervis once in three months. Its members are from the neighboring portions of New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey.

THE PORT JERVIS CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATION was incorporated Dec. 3, 1877. The objects were stated as follows: "Uniting the agricultural, mechanical, and laboring interests of said town with the mercantile, so that all may be interested and benefited." The corporation was to engage in the mercantile business, and for that purpose was to have a capital stock of $7000, divided into 140 shares of $50 each. The articles of association were verified Dec. 3, 1877, before C. E. Cuddeback, notary public, by Anthony Schooner and Walter Harvey, for themselves and eighty-eight other stockholders. The first officers were Luther H. Beckwith, president; Robert Kirkman, vice-president; Walter Harvey, secretary; Anthony Schooner, treasurer; Joseph Schofield, H. C. Nichols, James Nyce, James D. Frantz, Samuel Marsh, directors.

The president, secretary, and treasurer remain the same as above at the present time (November, 1880). The present vice-president is James D. Frantz.

The present board of directors consists of Richard Gray, Thomas Laidley, Aaron Starr, Robert Frompton, and J. H. Findon.

To commence business twenty per cent. upon each share of $50 was paid in, amounting in the aggregate to $1400. A small line of groceries and provisions was purchased, and a store opened Dec. 6, 1877. The enterprise has evidently had careful management, and has been carried on with increasing success. An inventory is taken every three months and dividends declared. Each stockholder's dividend is added to the $10 originally paid in, and no further assessments beyond the first $10 have been made.

At the expiration of two years and nine months each share was paid to the amount of $43.45, being a clear profit to each of $33.45, and the total capital of the association over and above any liabilities was $8600. The rooms now occupied are large and conveniently arranged, fronting on Fowler Street and Jersey Avenue.

The stock kept includes groceries, provisions, crockery, boots and shoes, wooden-ware, willow-ware, etc. Goods are sold at a fixed price, and the same both to stockholders and to the public generally. Six employes are now required,—a superintendent, four clerks, and one man with a delivery-wagon.

DEERPARK COUNCIL, No. 56, ROYAL TEMPLARS OF TEMPERANCE.

The above-named order was instituted at Port Jervis, Aug. 6, 1878, with twelve charter members, with the following officers: S. C., John L. Bonnell; V. C., Nelson B. Mondon; P. C., George W. Dowe; Rec. and Fin. Sec., John W. Keahler; Treas., Mrs. John L. Bonnell; H., Samuel S. Case; Chap., Henry Dutcher; G., Mrs. A. M. Keahler; S., A. J. Hallock. It has 98 members, 60 of whom are active and 38 life. Gentlemen come under the head of active and ladies as life members. The present officers are: S. C., George W. Bailey; V. C., Ed. M. Kimball; P. C., George W. Dowe; Rec. Sec., John W. Keahler; Fin. Sec., John M. Higgins, Jr.; Treas., Samuel Adams; Chap., Sarah Harding; H., Zach. Quick; Dep. H., Anna Eliza Carey; G., Mrs. Sanford Clauson; S., Sanford Clauson.

The past officers are as follows: George W. Dowe, John L. Bonnell, Nelson B. Mondon, John W. Keahler, District Deputy N. B. Mondon.

MINISINK TRIBE, No. 28, IMPROVED ORDER OF RED MEN.

This society was organized Oct. 1, 1874, and the first officers chosen were as follows: Sachem, J. M. Vaninger; Senior Sagamore, O. P. Gillson; Junior Sagamore, L. S. Rosecrance; Keeper of Wampum, A. J. Kittle; Chief of Records, E. G. Hoyt.

Officers of subsequent terms, in the same order:

Dec. 29, 1874, L. S. Rosecrance, O. P. Gillson, W. H. Knox, A. J. Kittle, E. G. Hoyt; June 28, 1875, S. D. Mapes, J. H. Kimbal, E. Gerst, C. W. Van Sickle, M. W. Perry; Dec. 28, 1875, J. H. Kimbal, E. Gerst, J. T. Fisher, C. W. Van Sickle, M. W. Perry; June 27, 1876, J. S. Holenshead, J. Leher, P. A. Hause, C. W. Van Sickle, William W. Bass; Dec. 26, 1876, J. Leher, A. J. Kittle, P. A. Hause, C. W. Van Sickle, William W. Bass; June 26, 1877, V. Dunlap, L. M. Lockwood, George Wyth, C. W. Van Sickle, William W. Bass; Dec. 25, 1877, William W. Bass, R. W. Tuthill, E. R. Dunn, A. T. Perry, J. Leher; June 25, 1878, R. W. Tuthill, Tim. Buckley, M. N. Zindle, A. T. Perry, C. W. Van Sickle; Dec. 31, 1878, A. T. Perry, L. S. Hough, N. Dunlap, J. Liber, O. P. Gillson; June 24, 1879, O. P. Gillson, D. D. Elston, Peter Stumb, A. T. Perry, Timothy Buckley; Dec. 31, 1879, E. Gerst, C. Leher, D. D. Elston, A. T. Perry, Timothy Buckley; June 25, 1880, Timothy Buckley, L. M. Lockwood, W. W. Courtright, C. Rumpf, O. P. Gillson.

The society has lost one member by death since its organization. It is in a sound financial condition, having surplus funds invested in government bonds.

THE PORT JERVIS GAS COMPANY.

This was organized in 1860, and the works were put into operation in the fall of that year. The price of gas was fixed at four dollars per thousand cubic feet, and the rent of meter twelve cents per month. The officers at that time were H. H. Farnum, president; A. P. Thompson, treasurer; F. Marvin, secretary; H. H. Farnum, E. A. Coen, John Conkling, A. P. Thompson, F. Marvin, directors; E. A. Coen, engineer. The certificate of incorporation bears date Aug. 24, 1860. This institution is still doing effective work and supplying the village with gas.

THE DEERPARK YOUNG MEN'S LITERARY UNION is organized for mutual literary improvement by means of discussions, lectures, etc. A. Van Etten, Jr., president; F. R. Bolton, secretary.

THE PORT JERVIS MANNERCHOR was established in March, 1867. The first officers were Jacob Gengnagel, president; C. Wiegand, secretary; Jacob Kadel, treasurer; F. Heidecker, leader. The presiding officers since the first have been C. Wiegand, Fred. Seeger, Jacob Kadel, and the present incumbent, C. Geisenheimer.

At the present time (November, 1880) the secretary is H. Pfluge, the vice-president John Englehart, the treasurer Michael Seeger, Jr., the leader Charles F. Spies. Like other societies of this name, the object is mainly the cultivation and rendering of music in the German language. The society has a pleasant hall, with convenient furniture, including a piano. It is located at the corner of Front and Sussex Streets, and is known as Mannerchor Hall.

RIVERSIDE LODGE OF GOOD TEMPLARS is not now in existence, but it was for a time a vigorous organization, and did some effectual temperance work.

INVINCIBLE LODGE, No. 68, I. O. OF G. T.,

was organized Feb. 6, 1875, with 50 charter members and the following officers: William H. Palmer, W. C. T.; Miss Anna McCarter, W. V. T.; William H. Platt, Chaplain; Charles W. Huntington, R. S.; Charles R. Beckwith, Assistant Secretary; Sanford McKeeby, F. S.; Charles T. Harding, Treas.; Isaac B. Smith, Marshal; Mrs. G. W. Eldred, D. M.; William Crawford, Guard; William H. Roberts, Sentinel. The lodge has maintained steady work, and at present numbers 100 members.

The present officers (November, 1880) are Andrew Deyeea, W. C. T.; Ada Carley, W. V. T.; Lottie Rumsey, Chaplain; DeWitt Dutcher, R. S.; H. W. Corey, A. S.; John Sarton, F. S.; Mary Taylor, Treas.; William A. Taft, M.; Jennie McNurney, D. M.; Emma Doty, Guard; William Richards, Sentinel.

THE WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

This association did a large amount of temperance work for some years, but is not now in active operation.

THE PORT JERVIS TEMPERANCE UNION was organized in October, 1877. Dr. C. M. Lawrence was elected president of the organization, which position he held for two years.

In November, 1879, B. S. Warner was elected president for one year, and was re-elected the following year, and consequently is at present the presiding officer.

The officers of the organization at present are: President, B. S. Warner; Vice-Presidents, George Wagner, Dennis Linley, Mrs. S. H. Rogers, George Decker; Secretary, S. H. Rogers; Corresp. Sec., Dr. James J. Mills; Treasurer, Miss Judson Adams.

YOUNG MEN'S SOCIAL UNION.

"The Young Men's Social and Literary Union of Port Jervis" was organized in 1879, through the influence of Dr. Goyne Talmage, pastor of the Reformed Church, and this notice, perhaps, would rightly come after notice of that church, although its members, now over 100, are from all of our churches. Its aims are social and literary improvement; its meetings are weekly, on Friday evenings. Officers: President, Charles F. Van Inwegen; Vice-President, George W. Hoagland; Secretary, Sidney Mapes; Treasurer, Henry H. Malven. It is in a very promising condition, and it is the society of the village, and of very general interest to both old and young.

NATIONAL BANK OF PORT JERVIS.

This old and well-established institution is located in a small stone building upon Pike Street. It was organized under the State law as the Bank of Port Jervis in March, 1853. The first board of directors were Thomas King, Stephen St. John, Gilbert F. Mondon, Gardner Ferguson, H. H. Farnum, John Conkling, Charles St. John, Jacob Hornbeck, Jr., Robert T. Woodward, William M. Graham, Lewis Cuddeback. Thomas King was chosen president, and he served until his death in 1857. His successor, Henry H. Farnum, also served until his death, October, 1879; and his successor, Hon. Charles St. John, is the present incumbent of that office. A. P. Thompson was chosen the first cashier, and has been in that position ever since.

Business was first opened in the Delaware House. The present building was erected in 1858, and business removed there in the fall of that year. The original capital was $120,000. It was afterwards increased to $130,000. It became a national bank in 1865.

The present board of directors are Charles St. John, Francis Mann, Jacob Hornbeck, O. P. Howell, L. O. Rose, F. R. Brodhead, S. A. J. Conkling, Peter E. Farnum, A. P. Thompson. The present officers are Charles St. John, president; Francis Marvin, vice-president; A. P. Thompson, cashier; W. E. Scott, teller; L. E. Goldsmith, book-keeper.

HENRY H. FARNUM.—The history of the development of the business interests of Port Jervis is inseparably connected with the presence in its midst of Henry H. Farnum. The name of no resident is more justly entitled to honorable mention as filling successfully and unostentatiously the rôles of prosperous merchant, public-spirited citizen, and philanthropist. In his business relations, Mr. Farnum established a character for manliness and integrity which won for him the confidence of the community, but it is especially as a philanthropist that his memory is cherished by the citizens, and in a marked degree by the poor of Port Jervis. He was born in Litchfield, Conn., May 10, 1808, and removed later to Otsego Co., N. Y., where, at such times as were possible, he attended the public school, and later the academy at Albany, N. Y. He subsequently joined the corps of engineers engaged in the construction of the Delaware and Hudson Canal. He remained with this corps until the completion of the enterprise in 1828, and was then appointed superintendent of the section upon which he had been engaged. He was afterward made assistant engineer, and remained with the company until 1838. Mr. Farnum later became resident engineer of the Black River Canal, during which time very important works were constructed which greatly enhanced his professional reputation.

He came to Port Jervis, then a small village, in 1842, and became a partner with Charles St. John in the general mercantile business. This was continued by him with successive partners until the year 1861, when he retired from trade.

Mr. Farnum was identified with all the prominent business interests of Port Jervis. He was one of the directors in the Bank of Port Jervis, established in 1853, and its president from 1867 until his decease. He was also the first president of the Port Jervis Gas-Light Company, and continued to fill the office during the remainder of his life.

He was instrumental in the organization of the Port Jervis Water-Works, and in 1872 was elected president of the company. Upon the organization of the Barrett Bridge Company in 1871, Mr. Farnum was chosen a director and its vice-president.

In 1868 he became a member of the Reformed Dutch Church, and ever after manifested much liberality in gifts to the church of his adoption. The present edifice was erected at a cost of $40,000, of which $13,000 was contributed by him. This was followed by the presentation of an organ, at a cost of $3000, and later by the erection of a chapel adjoining the church, at a cost of $15,000. Soon after a contribution of $2500 was made to the library of the theological seminary at New Brunswick. Numerous smaller bequests testify to the large-heartedness of the man. The private benefactions, which brought relief to the suffering, fed the poor and clothed the naked, are numberless, and exemplified by the giver the Divine injunction, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." Mr. Farnum was one of twelve children, but four of whom survive him. He was twice married; first, to Miss Abigail Ann, daughter of the late Stephen St. John, Jan. 11, 1837, who died in May, 1874; and a second time, to Mrs. Diana Farnum, in 1879. Mrs. Farnum still survives her husband.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF PORT JERVIS.

This institution was established by purchasing the charter and franchise of the National Bank at Delhi, Delaware Co. The organization at Port Jervis was effected in the spring of 1870, and business was commenced on the 1st of June.

The bank was first located in the Stewart block, on Pike Street. The present elegant and convenient banking building, at the corner of Ball and Sussex Streets, was erected in the fall of 1877 and the following winter. It was occupied for business in the spring of 1878. The first board of directors were Jacob Hornbeck, Eli Van Inwegen, E. Freedman, H. B. Wells, L. E. Bevans, Frank Kunkel, M. C. Everitt, Amos Van Etten, L. E. Elston, Abram Swartwout, Benjamin Van Fleet, Allen Everitt, R. W. Palmer. The first officers were Jacob Hornbeck, president; M. C. Everitt, vice-president; George A. Guernsey, cashier.

Mr. Hornbeck served as president until Jan. 1, 1874, when he was succeeded by M. C. Everitt, the present incumbent. Mr. Everitt served as vice-president until Jan. 25, 1871. He was succeeded by Amos Van Etten, who continued in that office until Jan. 9, 1872, when George S. Reddington was appointed.

W. H. Jackson

Eli Van Dineyca

The latter served until January, 1874, when Eli Van Inwegen, the present vice-president, was chosen.

Mr. Guernsey served as cashier until March 1, 1871, when he was succeeded by Mr. M. C. Everitt, who continued as cashier until his election to the presidency, January, 1874. At that time C. F. Van Inwegen, who had served as teller for about two years, was appointed cashier, and is the present incumbent of that office. The present book-keeper, Mr. S. L. Mapes, has been in the employ of the bank for six years past.

The capital of the bank is $100,000. The deposits amount to about $150,000; the loan account is nearly $200,000, and the bank has a surplus of $7000. The building and fixtures cost in the neighborhood of $10,000.

The present board (November, 1880) consists of George Armstrong, James Bennett, John Caskey, M. C. Everitt, W. P. Hornbeck, John B. Layton, Abram Swartwout, L. N. Stanton, Solomon Van Etten, Eli Van Inwegen, C. F. Van Inwegen, Henry B. Wells, Alexander Gordon.

ELI VAN INWEGEN.—Mr. Van Inwegen is identified not only by birth, but by business associations with Port Jervis, the village of his residence. He is the youngest child of Benjamin and Charity Cole Van Inwegen, and was born April 23, 1816, in the town of Deerpark.

His maternal grandparents were Cornelius W. and Hannah Gumaer Cole, of the same township, with whom his early life was spent. During this period the common schools of the neighborhood afforded him the only education he acquired, his time being also partially employed in labor upon the farm.

Mr. Van Inwegen succeeded to a portion of his grandfather's estate, which influenced him to continue his farming pursuits until the year 1860, when the sale of much of his land enabled him to retire from active labor. During 1870, Mr. Van Inwegen became identified with the Port Jervis Savings-Bank as its president, and the year following was elected its treasurer, which position he now fills. He has also been for several years the vice-president of the First National Bank of Port Jervis. These responsible offices indicate in a marked degree the integrity and business capacity which has marked his career through life, and which inspires the confidence of all citizens. Mr. Van Inwegen is a Democrat in his political preferences, and though not an aspirant for official honors, has served both as supervisor and justice of the peace of his native town. He is a regular attendant upon the services of the Reformed Dutch Church, though not a member. He was married Dec. 30, 1841, to Miss Elizabeth M., daughter of Crissy Bull, of Pike Co., Pa. They have had three children,—Julia, Cornelius, and Charles F. The latter, the only surviving child, was born in the year 1849, and graduated at Rutgers College, New Brunswick, in 1871. He is now cashier of the First National Bank of Port Jervis.

THE PORT JERVIS SAVINGS-BANK

was opened for business March 1, 1870, having been organized a few weeks preceding that date. The first trustees were as follows: Eli Van Inwegen, Charles W. Douglass, Wm. C. Rose, James H. Norton, Peter Wells, E. A. Brown, E. P. Gumaer, James Shay, Peter P. Swartwout, William Fossard, Abraham J. Cuddeback, F. R. Broadhead, John I. Westbrook, Jacob May, Frank Kunkel, Simon Westfall, Orville J. Brown, H. R. Stewart, Thomas J. Lyons, Andrew Cuff, Charles S. Burrell.

Eli Van Inwegen was chosen president; Horace K. Stewart, Peter P. Swartwout, vice-presidents; Peter Wells, secretary and treasurer. The first depositor was Jacob Brandt. Business was at first done in the store of Everitt & Rightmeyer, corner of Sussex and Front Streets; also for a time on Pike Street, in the Walsh block; afterwards at the corner of Ball and Sussex Streets, opposite the present First National Bank. Horace K. Stewart succeeded Eli Van Inwegen as president, and the latter became secretary and treasurer. At the present time (November, 1880) the business of the bank is being closed and the depositors paid off in full.

X.—PLACES OF SPECIAL NOTE OR OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

TRI-STATES ROCK.

Considerable interest attaches to this solid landmark. The boundary lines of three States—New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania—intersect at this point. By standing over the copper bolt sunk in the rock a person may be in the three States at the same instant. The rock is at the extreme point of the tongue of land lying between the Delaware and the Neversink, at the mouth of the latter. The whole formation is rocky, and will stand the wear of the floods for centuries to come as it has for centuries past. Visitors will find the rock by an easy walk from Port Jervis, entering the gate of Laurel Grove Cemetery and traversing its quiet paths. The well-known name, Carpenter's Point, arose from the early settlement of the Carpenter family upon the opposite shore of the Neversink. The old homestead was the present Coonrad Snyder place. The early dwelling-house, and the pioneer store in connection with it, were upon the site of the present residence. The early burials of the Carpenter family were in the orchard upon this place. After the opening of Laurel Grove Cemetery, Mr. John D. Carpenter purchased a lot near to the extreme point. The remains were removed to this lot. Carpenter's Point is therefore now rightly named in a double sense, both of settlement and burial. The old ferry upon the turnpike from Newburgh to Milford crossed the Delaware at this point. The exact position of the Tri-States Rock as determined by officers of the United States Coast Survey, given in a report bearing date May 14, 1874, is the following: Latitude, 41° 21' 22.63"; longitude, 74°

41° 40.70''; azimuth of boundary line, 300° 45' 38''. (See annual report of State geologist of New Jersey for 1874.)

within the limits of Port Jervis, is suggestive of olden memories. The precise location was opposite the old burial-place, on the other side of the street, just south of and not far from the present residence of Charles Van Inwegen. Here the early families came to worship in those times when perpetual vigilance was not only the price of liberty but of personal safety. Here stood the humble log "meeting-house" of 1743, in which was offered as acceptable worship as ever arose to heaven from the costly cathedrals of the Old World, or the elegant churches of our own modern times. Here came Brant, the great Indian leader, in July, 1779, and with his savage forces burned this pioneer house of worship, its flames rising to heaven in appealing protest against the wanton sacrilege. Up to this beautiful hill, pleasant even then in the wilderness, came the fathers and mothers, bringing their children for the baptismal blessing. Here the marriage ceremony was solemnized, founding new households of the faithful. Here the dead were brought for the last service of the church, and from its open doorway there moved many a sad procession to the burial-ground near by, led by the beloved pastor, pronouncing the same words of Christian consolation that now fall upon bereaved and mourning hearts.

THE VAN ETEN SCHOOL-HOUSE, from which the teacher, Jeremiah Van Auken, was taken out and cruelly murdered by Brant's expedition in July, 1779, was located on the old Levi Van Etten farm, now the property of Mark Van Etten. Its exact site was about one-fourth of a mile north of what is known as Black Rock Cut, on the Erie Railroad, and very near to the present Mark Van Etten dwelling-house.*

THE FORTS

mentioned in all the early annals gather about themselves most of the traditions of Indian attacks, and their location is a matter of considerable interest. In the upper neighborhood there was one fort at the house of Jacob Rutsen DeWitt. This was near Cuddebackville, on the west side of the Neversink, at the present Tillotson place. The exact position is said to have been between the present house and the small building at the corner of the roads. This fort was just at the foot of the hill where the Suckapack valley joins the main valley of the united streams, and admirably situated for observation and defense.

Another of the forts in the upper neighborhood was at the Gumaer place, now the Godfroy estate. Here the old stone building is still standing, and in excellent preservation. It occupies a commanding position, and the place is very suggestive of early history, of thrilling incidents in the border wars of this region. The entire property here, comprising a large estate, is now owned by Mr. Godfroy, a wealthy German of New York, who has erected a handsome residence not far from the old fort. He has made many improvements. A latest specimen of wind-mill now pumps the water from the historic old spring around which the colonists of 1690-95 located their early cabins. Large and convenient barns have been erected, and with rare sporting taste Mr. Godfroy has a collection of dogs that may well delight the eye of a fancier. The man in charge, Mr. John Conroy, delights to exhibit his pets, and with true Hibernian courtesy shows his visitors through the clean, neat dog quarters, the feed-kitchen, and the ample yards where the dogs have their daily exercise.

Besides these two forts there was still another in the upper neighborhood, probably just over the line in Sullivan County, at Westbrookville. Another still is mentioned as having been at the house of Mr. Depuy.

Of the forts in the lower neighborhood we have the following items:

In the account of incidents occurring during the time of the Old French War, it is stated that on one occasion the Indians lay in ambush to take "the lower fort at Mr. Westfall's." This was probably the one located in what is now Germantown, which has special mention below. It may, however, have been further down the river.

In the lower neighborhood it is said that Brant's expedition first attacked "the fort at Major Decker's." This was the George Cuddeback place of late years, on the east side of the Neversink, about three miles from Port Jervis. Another fort was at the house of Daniel Van Auken, near the present brick house, the residence of the late James D. Swartwout. Another still is mentioned by Peter E. Gumaer "at the house of Peter Coykendall, in the present village of Port Jervis."

THE OLD STONE HOUSE IN GERMANTOWN.

This venerable building is thus described by a local writer: The present structure, rebuilt in 1793, occupies the site of a fort or block-house built some time anterior to the Revolution, and occupied as a dwelling and trading-post by a family of the name of Hayne, who emigrated from the lowlands of Holland in 1760, and carried on a thriving trade with the Indians for many years.

Capt. Westfall, who married one of Mr. Hayne's daughters, is said to have lived in this house during the Brant invasion of 1779. Capt. Westfall, together with the other inhabitants of the neighborhood, was away scouting against an expected attack of the Indians from the South, but the latter came in from another way. A trusty negro buried the valuables belonging to the house, brought a horse to the door which the captain's wife mounted and made her escape to the high hills on the Jersey shore, near Carpenter's Point. The first child born in the old trading house to Capt. Westfall was a daughter, Alice, who became the wife of Peter Decker.

The old fort was one and a half stories high. The front half story was solidly constructed of stone hewn from the mountain rocks, with alternate layers of logs lapping and interlapping each other, the crevices being filled with mud and improvised mortar until the desired height was reached. The structure was then covered with an incongruous roof of saplings ingeniously twined together and overlaid crosswise with those of larger growth, the interstices being filled with dirt and gravel, and the whole cemented with a thick coat of river clay, rendering it secure against ingress and impervious to the action of the elements. Loop-holes serving in the capacity of light and for defense were constructed in different parts of the fortress. The foundation walls of the present building and a small portion of the upright wall are said to be the same as those of the early fort. Martinus Decker superintended the rebuilding, and lived there afterwards. It has had many subsequent owners, and is a genuine historic building.

INDIAN BURIAL-PLACE.

The Port Jervis Gazette, June 6, 1869, has the following article:

"A few days ago two young gentlemen residing in this village, while strolling along the bank of the Neversink River about three miles east of Port Jervis, on the lands of Mr. Levi Van Etten, discovered parts of two skeletons which had become unearthed by the caving in of the bank. The parts found consisted of two skulls, thigh, shin and arm-bones, and two shoulder-blades, all in a partially decayed condition. An under-jaw, with a full set of teeth in sound condition, was also found; also an Indian arrow-head. It is a well-known fact that there is an old Indian burying-ground on the farm of Mr. Van Etten on the east bank of the Neversink at the place above mentioned, the graves occupying an area of about ten acres. A large rock jutting out in the bend of the river has caused a wearing away of the bank by the action of the water making inroads on the burying-ground year after year until about six acres only remain. From time to time remains of the aborigines buried there have been unearthed, and many more have been carried down the stream. The existence of this burying-ground has been traditionally known for years, but the first exhumation of bodies was made about thirty years ago by Isaac Clark, a workman in the employ of Mr. Van Etten, who, while digging a hole in the ground in which to bury potatoes, struck with his spade what proved to be the skull of an Indian warrior. Isaac was somewhat startled on first making the discovery of human remains, but speedily recovering his self-possession he commenced making further researches, which resulted in bringing to light the perfect skeleton of an Indian in a sitting posture, with his face turned towards the west as if to watch the departing rays of the setting sun, this being the position in which the Indians place their dead for burial. The articles found deposited in the grave were a tomahawk, arrow-barbs, a huge sheet-iron tobacco-box well filled with the comforting weed. A similar box contained a pocket-handkerchief covered with Indian devices, which had probably been presented by some white person. All the bodies found were in the same position as the above. It is probable this burial-ground belonged to the Minisink Indians, who once roamed through this valley."

In connection with the above we would mention the "Willehoosa" or Indian house, as it was called by the early Dutch settlers of the valley,—a cavern dug out of a rock on the side of Shawangunk Mountain not far distant from the burial-ground. This cave contains three departments about the size of an ordinary room.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

It might be expected that in this town, with its several streams and with so enterprising a village as Port Jervis, there would exist various large manufacturing enterprises. This is not the case. The industrial interests of the town are of a varied character. In the valleys along the streams there are alluvial lands, where many valuable farms are found. Upon the higher lands there are also portions which are capable of cultivation, yielding fair returns for labor. There are also numerous farms of excellent grazing capabilities. The agricultural productions of the town to be shown in the forthcoming report of the last census will doubtless compare favorably with other towns in this vicinity.

Along the line of the Delaware and Hudson Canal there are various interests connected with boating and transportation which have tended to develop growth and prosperity. The opening of the canal was an event of great importance to this town as well as to all others along its route. It was, however, the opening of the Erie Railroad which was the real source of the modern growth of Port Jervis, and the development of the material interests of the town. By the location of the Erie works at this point,—the machine-shops and the round-houses for two important divisions of the road,—a large number of employes settled here immediately. This in turn developed trade. Buildings were required, and to build these demanded other laborers, and so by a combination of circumstances the village of Port Jervis grew rapidly both in business and population. The Erie Railroad is the chief factor in producing this result. There are two foundries doing a business of considerable extent; there are glove manufactories, a boot- and shoe-manufactory, a furniture-factory, a sash- and blind-factory, and other similar enterprises; no one of them of very large proportion, but together constituting quite an addition to the business of the place. The trade necessary to supply the incoming population became an important enterprise, and as it increased from this source in the first place, it soon drew to Port Jervis as a common business centre the people of the surrounding country for some distance.

GLASS MANUFACTURE

has become an industry of considerable importance. The factory near the canal in Port Jervis proper is owned by Wm. Pountney. It was established by the firm of Pountney & Brox, and was managed for a time by that firm. Afterwards Mr. Brox retired, and Mr. Pountney has carried on the same alone for eight or ten years. The principal line of work consists of lamp- and lantern-globes and castor-bottles. About 100 hands in all, men and boys, are employed.

The glass-works in Germantown were established in 1873 by Mr. Brox, who had retired from the above-named firm. Soon after Mr. Wade Buckley was associated in the business, and the firm-name became Brox & Buckley, as it remains at present. The line of work is the same as that made at the Pountney establishment. About the same number of hands are employed, and the business done may be approximately stated at $100,000 a year. Brox & Buckley have their buildings very conveniently situated near to the Erie Railroad, with a branch track, so that their coal is dumped directly into their sheds and all their shipments made with facility and promptness.

THE ERIE MACHINE-SHOPS, with the round-house and the other buildings necessary to their immense business, cover a large area of ground. This station is the dividing point between two important divisions of the road. The place is a very hive of busy industry. The arrival and departure of numerous trains, the continual switching to be done in the yard, the great locomotive stable, where each fiery steed has his appointed "stall," the machine-shops, the station buildings, with their varied offices, together constitute a business of vast proportions. The business of the "Delaware Division" of the Erie and its branches, Lackawanna to Honesdale, Susquehanna to Carbondale, is done at these yards. Three hundred and ninety-four men are employed.

GLOVE MANUFACTURE.

F. W. Stowells engaged in this branch of industry some years ago; Edward H. Allen also for a time; Charles Chant commenced making gloves in 1874, and continues in the business at the present time, employing several hands, and making an excellent line of goods. His establishment is upon Pike Street, Port Jervis. On Front Street, C. F. Blizzard is engaged in the same business to some extent.

SASH- AND BLIND-FACTORY, PORT JERVIS.

This business was opened in 1861 by Turner & Brother, and soon after Swinton & Wells purchased the establishment. In 1863-64, J. M. Cago entered the firm in the place of Mr. Swinton. In 1874, Mr. Wells sold out, and J. M. Cago became the sole proprietor, and is still carrying on the business. The buildings are conveniently situated, and a fine quality of work is manufactured.

FOUNDRY OF SWINTON, SHIMER & CO.

This was established in 1862 or 1863 by Swinton Bros. Subsequently, in 1870, or about that time, the firm became changed to its present form. An extensive business is done, especially in the manufacture of stoves. A great variety of other castings are also made, and agricultural implements to some extent. The firm have a very large store on Front Street, where their stoves are sold at wholesale and retail, together with an extensive line of general hardware; about twelve hands are employed.

FOUNDRY OF ST. JOHN & MALVEN.

This old and well-known establishment, 39 and 41 Front and Jersey Avenue, is engaged in an extensive manufacture of stoves, agricultural implements, and miscellaneous castings. In the hardware-store (of late years under separate management) the productions of the foundry are kept for sale, together with all varieties of goods common to this business.

THE STONE GRIST-MILL AT PORT JERVIS was built in 1834 by Dr. Ball, of Brooklyn. The water-power is supplied by the overflow of the Delaware and Hudson Canal. It has done a large and extensive business from the beginning to the present time. It is now a part of the estate of the late H. H. Farnum, and the lessee is Thomas Sharp.

A. B. GOODALE'S FURNITURE-FACTORY, on Jersey Avenue, corner of Fowler Street, has been a marked feature of Port Jervis for many years. In connection with this are extensive salesrooms, located near the post-office.

PRESERVATION OF GREEN FODDER.

An experiment (it can hardly yet be called an industrial enterprise) has been made by Mr. Wade Buckley, of the Germantown Glass-Works. The theory is one developed recently in French agricultural publications, and tried last year to some extent in Massachusetts. Mr. Buckley has two pits,—one twenty-two feet long, fifteen feet wide, and nine feet deep, and another eight and a half feet deep, with the same length and breadth as the other. The fodder (sowed corn or anything similar) is cut into small pieces and then packed close in the pits. It is then pressed down by weights, the intention being to exclude the air substantially, as in the case of domestic canned fruit. The theory supposes that after a few months this may be taken out in excellent preservation, and with even better qualities for feed than when first packed. Mr. Buckley is supposed to be the first one to try this process in the State of New York.

XII.—MILITARY.

FRENCH WAR OF 1755.

The Indians are said to have mostly retired from this section of country before the opening of this war, but the settlement in the Mamakating Valley was in a perilous position, owing to their known hostility. To insure greater safety a majority of the women and children were removed to Rochester, Wawarsing, or New Paltz. At the commencement of the war there were probably about thirty families within the limits of the present town of Deerpark. At this time the settlement was in two parts, known as the "upper neighborhood" and the "lower neighborhood." The former may be said in general terms to have been north of the "old county line;" the "lower neighborhood" was south of that line, being the present place of Port Jervis and vicinity.

In the upper neighborhood three small forts were erected,—one on the Neversink, at the northwest end; one at the house of Peter Gumaer, in the central part, and the third at the southwest end, near the residence in later years of Peter Swartwout.

In the lower neighborhood there were also three built. Their locations are not so definitely known,* but they gave protection to about eighteen families, while those of the upper neighborhood sheltered about twelve families.

Incidents of these troubled times are given in the General History. (Ante, p. 53.)

brought its additional Indian hostilities upon the inhabitants of these towns. The Indians returned to the old settlement as enemies to the whites. Their first incursion was in 1777, when they attacked the family of Mr. Sprague, who lived in the northern part of the town. The next year they attacked the family of Mr. Brooks, some of whom they killed and took others of them prisoners.

Previous to the above date little danger had been apprehended, and at the time the militia of the town were doing duty elsewhere. Capt. Cuddeback, Gerardus Swartwout, Cornelius Swartwout, and Gerardus Van Inwegen, on whose personal presence and exertions the people chiefly relied for protection, were at Fort Montgomery when it was taken; and though the others returned, Van Inwegen never did. The Swartwouts escaped and Van Inwegen was killed. They were a part of Col. Allison's Goshen militia.

These Indian attacks alarmed the people, and the Committee of Safety, who had the charge of home military defenses, began to act with vigilance. They directed scouting-parties from time to time to look over and scour the frontier, in doing which they swept over the woods as far as Cohecton, a distance of forty miles, where a few families had settled before the war. Persons suspected of aiding the enemy were apprehended and imprisoned by them or discharged. The militia of the town were permitted to remain at home to guard that frontier. They ordered the erection of three forts in the neighborhood of Peenpack,—one at the house of Jacob Rutzen DeWitt, one at the house of Benjamin Depuy, Esq., and the third at the house of Ezekiel Gumaer.

At this time the Peenpack neighborhood extended from the line between Orange and Ulster to what is now Cuddebackville, a distance of four miles. Benjamin Depuy, Philip Swartwout, and Thomas Kytte were the first committee for the town. The first two were justices of Mamakating. Harmanus Van Inwegen became a member afterwards. The lower neighborhood, called "Over the River Neighborhood," because on the opposite side of the Neversink, extended down to the Delaware, and was in the old county of Orange. Members of the Gumaer family were sent to Mr. James Finch's, who lived at what is now called Finchville. Benjamin Depuy and one or two of his sons sent their wives and small children to Maj. Phillips' for safety. Some women and children encamped in the woods on the east side of the Neversink for a short time. The forts were each garrisoned by a few soldiers, called nine months' men, sent for the purpose from different places.

When the war commenced there were about fifty families within the limits of Deerpark, which removed to the forts. Oct. 13, 1778, a party of nearly 100 Indians and Tories, commanded by Capt. Brant, invaded the settlement. They first fell upon the family of Mr. Westfall, and killed one man. They next attacked the house of Mr. Swartwout, who was at home with his sons, the women having been removed to the fort. They all endeavored to escape, but one of the sons was shot down between the house and barn. Another ran to the river, half a mile off, swam it, and was shot near the opposite shore. The father, an old man, and two of his other sons ran on together for his assistance, but finding that they would soon be overtaken, the father told his son James, a very active, strong man, to run and save himself, which he did. The Indians pursued him half a mile over fences and across lots, when he gained the fort, and they gave up the chase. The father and the other son were soon overtaken and dispatched.

When the firing of guns was heard, those who were out on their farms repaired to the forts at Gumaer's and DeWitt's. The other fort was abandoned, as there were no troops to garrison it. As there were but few men in Fort Gumaer, Capt. Cuddeback, who commanded, in order to deceive the enemy, paraded all the women and young people back of the house and fort, collected all the hats and coats about the house, and put them on the women. He also placed the spare guns and sticks in their hands, so that all might appear to be soldiers. When the enemy came in sight of the fort, the captain ordered the drum to beat, and marched them in Indian file from the rear to the front of the fort, and entered it in a distant but distinct view of the Indians. The women and children were ordered into the cellar. Anna Swartwout—a large woman, somewhat in years, the widow of Maj. James Swartwout—told the captain that she would take a pitchfork, which had been brought into the fort as a defensive weapon, and remain with the men, and assist in case the enemy should attempt to enter. The captain granted the request, and she took the fork, and in true military bearing walked about, anxiously observing the conduct of the Indians, and ready to defend her castle.

The fort was a picket-fort with nine men, with the families of the neighborhood in it. It was situated on open land, and could not be approached in daytime by the Indians without their being seen; and as the inhabitants were known to be good marksmen, they did not approach within gunshot. As the enemy passed a few shots were fired from the fort without effect. They passed on to Fort DeWitt, where they took a station on a hill in the woods, and fired a few shot at the fort and house without any other effect than killing Capt. Newkirk's horse. The fort returned the compliment with the same result, doing no harm, as was known when the enemy retired from the settlement the same day. They burned all the houses and barns in the vicinity, except those houses which were saved by the extinguishment of the fire after being communicated to them. This produced great distress for a time, for the inhabitants were despoiled of their grain, hay, buildings, furniture, etc. The day after the enemy retired, Maj. Phillips, of Phillipsburgh, arrived with a company of militia, but the damage had been done and the spoliators had departed.

Other interesting incidents are related of these stormy years. We give them below as they are retained in the time-honored traditions of the various families. They have, however, but little support in early documents, and it is difficult to see how some of them can be consistent with the facts of history.

Capt. Brant with a company of Indians and Tories invaded what we have called the "lower neighborhood" in this town. His first assault was upon the fort at Maj. Decker's, which he entered unawares,—the men being out,—and two negro boys were taken prisoners. Then the party proceeded to the dwelling of Anthony Van Etten, Esq., where a few Indians entered a blacksmith's shop, where a black man worked. Mr. James Swartwout happened to be in at the time, and it was agreed that he should get up into the chimney and secrete himself there, and that the negro should stay in the shop, as the Indians probably would not kill or injure him. This was done, and the Indians came in, and on looking around saw no one but the negro. They took up, handled, threw over and tumbled down the various articles in the shop, and then one of them took hold of the handle of the bellows and began to blow up the fire at a furious rate. The negro, knowing the effect of the heat and smoke on his friend in the chimney, put his hand on the Indian and told him to "stop or he would spoil that thing." He respected the caution and ceased to blow, when they left the shop. Swartwout came down quite exhausted by breathing the smoke and heated air, and by the great exertion necessary to brace and keep himself from falling down for so long a time. The artifice succeeded and he escaped.

When the Indians were discovered approaching the house of James Van Fleet the inmates fled. Roolif Cuddeback, who was there at the time, ran into the woods pursued by an Indian. When nearly overtaken he turned upon him, upon which the Indian stopped and threw his tomahawk at him, but it struck a bush and missed its mark. Cuddeback closed in with him, both being without weapons except a knife which the Indian had in his belt. The struggle was severe, for life or death, each endeavoring to possess himself of the fatal instrument. It fell to the ground and was of no use to either. The battle was continued till both were nearly exhausted, when the Indian, freeing himself from the grasp of Cuddeback, left him, while the latter hastened to escape pursuit by the other Indians. Cuddeback was a strong man, and too powerful for the Indian, but he afterwards stated that the Indian was very supple, and in the struggle became naked, and his skin was so slippery that it gave him the chance very readily to escape from his holds and grips. It was said that the Indian died a few years after, from the wounds and injuries received in the encounter. The father of this Indian is said to have been shot while crossing the river on horseback by Capt. Cuddeback, the brother of James Cuddeback, during this incursion.

This day there had been a funeral, and Maj. Decker and some others on their return on horseback met the Indians. They shot at and wounded the major, who rode into the woods and escaped. There was some firing at the Van Auken fort, and one man killed. An Indian, attempting to get to a building near the fort to set it on fire, was shot. By this time the smoke of the dwellings was seen ascending in many directions, and it was generally known that the Indians, with Brant at their head, were there. The very name of this leader struck the inhabitants with terror. An occurrence took place here which shows that he still contained a spark of humanity. The Indians had visited the school-house and threatened to exterminate one generation of the settlement at a blow. Jeremiah Van Auken was the teacher, and they took him from the house, conveyed him about half a mile off, and then killed him. Some of the boys in the school were cleft with the tomahawk; others fled to the woods for concealment from their bloody assailants; while the little girls stood by the slain body of their teacher, bewildered and horror-struck, not knowing their own fate, whether death or captivity. While they were standing in this pitiful condition, a strong, muscular Indian suddenly came along, and with a brush dashed some black paint across their aprons, bidding them "hold up the mark when they saw an Indian coming, and it would save them;" and with the yell of a savage he plunged into the woods and disappeared. This was Brant, and the little daughters of the settlers were safe. The Indians, as they passed along and ran from place to place, saw the black mark and left the children undisturbed. The happy thought, like a flash of lightning, entered the minds of these little sisters, and suggested that they could use the mark to save their brothers. The scattered boys were quickly assembled, and the girls threw their aprons over the clothes of the boys, and stamped the black impression upon their outer garments. They in turn held up the palladium of safety as the Indians passed and repassed, and these children were thus saved from injury and death.* Mrs. Leah Van Auken escaped by hiding herself in a ditch.

After the war ended the people here had much to do to reinstate themselves in as good condition as they were before the war commenced. Much money was lost by the depreciation of the Continental paper currency, and most of the buildings, together with household goods and furniture, were burnt, horses taken, etc.; and as they could not make money by their farming business to enable them to build, some in the upper neighborhood undertook to raft round timber down the Neversink River for the Philadelphia market from the forest above the settlement. The stream was rough, and even now is not navigable for rafting, notwithstanding considerable money was expended a few years since to make it so. In this they met with many disasters: one man was drowned, and the experiment was abandoned; after which timber was got out and thrown into the river, which in the freshets floated down, and whatever of it could be found where the river was navigable was collected and rafted by the owners (each one having previously marked his own) down the Neversink and Delaware Rivers to Philadelphia. The navigation of the rivers was then very imperfectly understood.

Before the inhabitants of the upper neighborhood could commence building dwelling-houses, etc., they had to build some mills to manufacture materials for the purpose. Three men became partners to build one saw-mill, and three others to build another, where-with each manufactured materials for his own use, and also for others who were not owners. One of these mills (on Bush Kill) did considerable business for some years afterwards.

Farms having become small before the war commenced, a large proportion of the inhabitants, a few years after it ended, became desirous of emigrating into a new country to advance their interests. Moses DeWitt, a young man of this neighborhood, son of Jacob R. DeWitt, who was naturally well talented and in a great measure self-taught, after serving as an under-surveyor in the business of this State to run a line for dividing the States of Pennsylvania and New York, and surveying some State land at and in the vicinity of Tioga Point, became one of the surveyors of the military lands; and he, together with Maj. Hardenburgh, were appointed to have the agency of that business. Peter G. Cuddeback, another young man of this town, was employed by them for a time as an under-surveyor. From them early information was received here of the good quality of those lands, which, together with the influence of DeWitt, led to the emigration of a large proportion of the inhabitants of the place into that district of country, who were among the first pioneers. This did not only advance the interests of those who removed, but of those who remained, for their farms were much enlarged in consequence of it.

Maj. John Decker was one of the prominent men of the Mamakating Valley at the opening of the Revolution. His commission from the Provincial Congress is in possession of Dr. Solomon Van Etten, of Port Jervis. It bears date Feb. 28, 1776, and commissions him as "second Major of the Goshen Regiment of Militia of Foot in Orange County, of which William Allison, Esq., is colonel." Maj. Decker resided on the well-known George Cuddeback place of later years.

One of the objects of the Indian raids in these valleys, tradition says, was to procure the scalp of Maj. Decker, for which the British had offered a reward. At that time Maj. Decker's house was built of wood, and it was surrounded with wooden fortifications,—logs laid up,—making quite a protection against the savages. This was closed by a heavy gate. It was in the month of July they came. The men were in the field gathering the harvest, and there was no one in the major's residence except his aged mother and a child. His wife and a colored woman were at the spring washing. The older children were at school. The major on that day was attending the funeral of a brother officer at the fort, which stood where Abraham Swartwout now lives. The Indians surrounded the house, and a Tory first entered and told the mother that the Indians were going to burn the house, and proceeded to build a fire with dry wood in the centre of the floor. There were two pails of water in the kitchen, and she boldly poured the water upon the fire and put it out. They told her she must not do that again or they would kill her. Mrs. Decker, wife of the major, attempted to flee across the fields to gain protection at another fort. Brant sent an Indian after her, who brought her back, and Brant told her he wanted her to see her husband's residence burn down and she should not be harmed. She then asked him if she could save anything. He answered, "Yes, anything you can." She rushed in and saved two beds and bedding, and Brant directed two young Indians to assist her in carrying them off to a safe place.

That night the family of Maj. Decker slept on the banks of the Neversink, with nothing but the canopy of heaven above them. The major on his return from the funeral was met by a party of Indians at a point just below the hill at the bend of the road, where Henry Hoffman now lives, between Abraham Swartwout's and Solomon Van Fleet's. He was riding very fast, having seen the smoke of his burning residence in the distance. He dashed through the party of Indians, and he said it seemed as if they were frightened, as none fired upon him, and all were looking to the rear as if they expected a company to be following him. For some cause he feared there was a larger party of Indians in front of him, and he wheeled his horse and rode back through the same party again, when they fired upon him, wounding him in the thigh and in the abdomen. He rode on and turned down the old road, which was behind the hill back of Hoffman's house. His horse becoming unmanageable, ran into a tree-top which had fallen across the road, and fastened himself there so that the major could not get him loose. He left his horse and went up the rocks and crept into a cave, a spot where now is the track of the Erie Railroad. The Indians pursued to the opening of the rock, but did not find him. That night he traveled on foot across the mountains, and came to a house near Finchville, now owned by a Mr. Green, where he found his son, Benjamin Decker, a youth of sixteen years, who had escaped from the Indians at the school-house, where they came and killed the teacher.

*Mr. R. Hulse, of Deposit, in a series of "Delaware Papers" (1865) relates this story as he received it from one of the children who lived to within the writer's memory. He says Brant caught up two girls and marked their aprons with his sign, the figure of a turtle; that after being released the girls stood in a row with one girl who had a marked apron in front; that the girls placed the boys in the same order, and put the other marked apron upon the boy in front. The statement fails to harmonize with the historic record that the settlement was surprised by the Indians.

Dr. Solomon Van Etten, from whom these particulars are obtained, is a great-grandson of Maj. Decker. Dr. Van Etten's grandmother (Mrs. Carpenter) was Margaret Decker, one of the girls at the school-house. The version of the marked aprons story coming down from Mrs. Carpenter does not differ much from those already given, except that the girls partially concealed the boys under their marked aprons. A brother of Margaret Decker, running away from the Indians, dropped his books; the Indians stopped and he escaped. Hearing a cry, he found a child perhaps a year and a half old, lost by its mother in the confusion. Taking the child, he found his father's cow by the well-known bell, procured milk for the child, and carrying it away the child was saved.

The names of men from what is now the territory of Deerpark who served in the armies of the Revolution, who were at Fort Montgomery and elsewhere, will be found, so far as they are now to be obtained, in the lists given elsewhere in this volume.

WAR OF 1861-65.

The firing upon the flag at Fort Sumter provoked an outburst of patriotic feeling in Port Jervis, as well as everywhere else throughout the loyal North. A public meeting was held April 18th, at which Dr. John Conkling presided, assisted by three vice-presidents,—Dr. C. M. Lawrence, Dr. S. Van Etten, and John Green. George Brodhead was appointed secretary. Speeches were made, and the following resolutions adopted:

"Whereas, By the act of South Carolina and other Southern States our country has been plunged into the horrors of civil war; and Whereas, they have proclaimed to the world their intention to dissolve the American Union and break up this government, cemented by the blood of the Revolutionary sires; and Whereas, the traitors calling themselves the government of the Confederate States have proclaimed their intentions to seize the National capital, therefore

"Resolved, That as American citizens, knowing no sections but the Union bequeathed to us by our father, we pledge ourselves to the support of our national government in their patriotic efforts to sustain the constitution and enforce the laws.

"Resolved, That the heroic defense of Fort Sumter by Maj. Anderson and his eighty heroic men against eight thousand organized traitors is worthy of the best days of the republic, and reflects imperishable glory upon his name and lustre upon our flag, and we hail it as a harbinger that the Union must and shall be preserved.

"Resolved, That the people of Port Jervis, desirous of showing their patriotism, will aid and assist in the formation of a volunteer company, for the purpose of tendering their services to the Governor of New York.

"Resolved, That a list be opened forthwith to receive subscriptions to defray expenses in forming such company, and that the funds be placed in the hands of three responsible men for that purpose."

A committee on finance was appointed, consisting of John Conkling, John Green, and Solomon Van Etten.

DONATIONS FOR SOLDIERS AND SOLDIERS' FAMILIES.

Feb. 14, 1862, Sparrowbush sent, in clothing, nearly $100 worth.

Aug. 20, 1862, the ladies of Carpenter's Point donated a valuable assortment of bandages, lint, and other hospital supplies.

Aug. 22, 1862, ladies of Deerpark raised $20 towards a regimental flag, and presented Capt. Bush a sword worth $45.

At the opening of the struggle the first subscription was carried up to nearly $1000. The wealthy gave of their wealth and the poor of their poverty, the single dollar of the poor laborer representing the sturdy patriotism of the people as well as the $100 of his wealthy neighbor. Soldiers' aid societies were formed, and the women of Deerpark gave their services in every possible form.

The Ladies' Aid Society, which was organized in September, 1862, Mrs. H. H. Farnum, president, sent clothing and supplies to the amount of $843.63, as shown by an itemized report of the president, and the report evidently covers only a portion of the society's work.

OFFICIAL ACTION.

Under date of Aug. 1, 1864, a petition signed by twelve citizens was presented to the town clerk, requesting a special town-meeting for the purpose of considering the question of paying bounties to volunteers. The meeting called in pursuance of this petition, and in accordance with law, was held August 10th. It was voted (220 to 16) to raise a tax of $48,600, for the purpose of paying a bounty of $300 to each volunteer required to fill the quota of the town of Deerpark under the call of the President for 500,000 men. The justices presiding at this meeting were L. F. Hough, James N. Penny, and William Westfall. The minutes were recorded by George Brodhead, town clerk.

On the 18th of the same month, at another special town-meeting, an additional tax was voted for the same purpose of $105,300. This proposition passed by a vote of 80 to 3.

Jan. 30, 1865, at a special town-meeting, duly called to consider the propriety of paying bounties for volunteers under the December call of the President for troops, no vote was reached on the subject.

At a subsequent meeting, Feb. 7, 1865, a tax of $50,000 was authorized by a vote of 254 to 29.

There is no soldiers' list preserved in the office of the town clerk, as intended by the law of 1865, and it has been necessary to compile the list given below from various miscellaneous sources. It may therefore include a few names from places beyond the borders of the town of Deerpark, while it may not be complete for the town itself. It has been arranged mainly from the printed muster-in rolls of the State, and from various memoranda in the hands of Mr. William H. Nearpass. The publishers of this volume, as well as the citizens of Deerpark, are under obligations to Mr. Nearpass for the diligence which he has shown in the collection and preservation of papers relating to the civil war, as well as other historical matters, and for the cordial assistance he has given in the preparation of this chapter upon the town of Deerpark.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

PETER P. SWARTWOUT.

The Swartwout family are one of the oldest in Orange County, and the name is closely allied to its early history. Its members were staunch patriots during the Revolution, and suffered much from Indian and Tory invasions as a consequence. The progenitor of the race in America was Ruloff Swartwout, who left the dikes and fertile flats of his native Holland about the year 1750, as nearly as can be determined. He possessed all the heroic virtues peculiar to the sons of the Fatherland, which have in a marked degree been transmitted to successive generations of the family. Ruloff Swartwout had a family of children, the exact number of which is not known. It is, however, probable that among them were Anthony, Thomas, and Gerardus, each of whom settled at Peenpack Flats, in 1690. Peter P., the subject of this biography, traces his descent directly from Anthony, who had three children,—Samuel, James, and Jane.

Among the children of James was Philip, who located on land now occupied by Peter P., which has been for more than two centuries in possession of members of the family. Philip as early as 1751 married Miss Antje Wynkoop, also of Holland ancestry, who was among the early inhabitants of Ulster

* There were eleven recruits secured in Deerpark at one time, and twenty at another; both lists, or at least one of them, for the regular army. There were also fifteen colored men enlisted here for a Rhode Island regiment, but no record of the names of these forty-five is preserved in Port Jervis. Lieut. Baxter enlisted thirty men in Deerpark for First N. Y. Engineers. Some of the names may be in the above list, but there is no list preserved. Seventeen of Company F, 70th, re-enlisted.

County. During the conflict between New York and New Jersey, involving the settlement of the boundary line, she was taken prisoner and suffered death as the result of illness and exposure. Philip had children,—Gerardus, Cornelius, Philip Jr., and Jacobus, by the first marriage, and by a second, to Miss Schoonover, one son, Peter. The latter was married Jan. 24, 1788, to Miss Jane Westfall, their children being Simeon, Philip, Sallie, James D., Samuel, David, and Deborah. Of this number, Philip, the father of Peter P., was united in marriage to Mrs. Esther Westbrook Westfall, and had six children,—Peter P., Jane, Catharine, Henry B., Elizabeth, and Sarah. Of this number but four—Peter P. and three sisters—survive. The former was born in Sussex Co., N. J., May 25, 1817, and spent his early life upon the homestead in Deerpark,—the home hallowed by associations of the past, and bearing in indelible bloodstains evidence of the conflicts and struggles of his heroic forefathers during the French and Indian wars. The common schools afforded him all the educational advantages at the time available, and his early training guided his tastes in the direction of agriculture as a vocation. He has since continued to cultivate the soil, and been a conspicuous example of the industry and practical wisdom which are the certain forerunners of success in life.

Mr. Swartwout was married, Nov. 10, 1842, to Miss Hannah, daughter of Benjamin Cuddeback, of Port Jervis, and the following year removed to his present home, where he has since resided. They have had nine children,—Catharine (Mrs. D. S. DeWitt), Jemima, Jane (Mrs. H. J. Bidwell), Elizabeth, Philip, Esther, Ellen, Benjamin, and Henry. Six of these are still living, and four reside under the parental roof. Mr. Swartwout is not an aspirant for political honors. He has, however, filled two terms as supervisor of his township, has been elected justice of the peace, and has been a director in both the National Bank and the First National Bank of Port Jervis. He was during the existence of the militia law of the State a skillful military tactician, and held the rank of lieutenant-colonel when the law was repealed. His religious preferences are for the Reformed Dutch Church, of which he is a cordial supporter.

MOSES VAN INWEGEN.

Moses Van Inwegen, the subject of this biographical sketch, was the son of Cornelius Van Inwegen, who was born March 23, 1772, and Deborah, his wife, whose birth occurred Oct. 9, 1774. Their family circle included seven children, of whom Moses, the eldest, was born Dec. 6, 1796. His early life was not varied by incidents of special importance. The pursuits of his father were those of an industrious agriculturist, and the son, having been educated to the same calling, instinctively followed the vocation of his parent. The neighboring public schools afforded him advantages of education when the demands of the farm were not imperative; the latter, however, speedily absorbed his entire attention. Mr. Van Inwegen was united in marriage Jan. 9, 1823, to Miss

MOSES VAN INWEGEN.

Susan Mapes. They had eight children, of whom five are now living. He was married a second time, July 6, 1850, to Miss Eliza, daughter of Abram Shimer, who is the mother of six children, all of whom survive.

Mr. Van Inwegen had few political aspirations, though a firm Republican, and at all times zealous for the success of his party. A taste for military tactics was early developed by him, and before the State military law was abolished he rose to the rank of captain of militia. He was a regular attendant upon the services of the Reformed Church, and, though not a member, responded cheerfully to demands for aid in its behalf.

Moses Van Inwegen's death occurred April 22, 1863, at the homestead, which is now occupied by Mrs. Van Inwegen and her children.

GEORGE CUDDEBACK.

The Cuddeback family is one of the oldest in Orange County, the name having been originally spelled Caudebec. They are of Huguenot extraction, and among the French refugees who fled from religious persecution on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, in 1683. The town of Caudebec, in Normandy, founded as early as the year 1400,—a borough containing a population of about 10,000, and evincing much commercial enterprise,—was originally the stronghold of the family, from which they emigrated either to England or Holland, probably the latter country. Jacob Cuddeback (or Caudebec), previous to the year 1690, came to America, having landed in Virginia, where he remained a brief time, and then settled on the east bank of the Hudson River, north of New York, where he engaged in the fur trade. He was then twenty years of age, and may be regarded as the progenitor of the family in the Empire State. He married Margaret, daughter of Benjamin Provost, a trader in the city of New York. About the year 1690, in company with the Swartwouts, Gumaers, and others, he located in the valley of the Neversink, which is now largely populated by their descendants. Jacob and Margaret Cuddeback had a family of nine children, among whom was William, who married Jemima Elting, of Old Paltz, and was the father of five children, among whom was Benjamin, who was united in marriage to Catharine Van Fliet, and had seven children, among whom was Henry, the father of George Cuddeback. Henry, above mentioned, was born March 23, 1771, and was married to Esther Gumaer, in 1794, whose birth occurred Sept. 23, 1774. Their family embraced eight children,—Catherine, Elizabeth, Simeon, Jacob G., George, Huldah, Cynthia, and Benjamin. The birth of their youngest son, George, occurred in Deerpark, Aug. 10, 1815. His early life was spent at the place of his nativity. In 1830, with his father, he removed to the farm now owned and occupied by him, which came into his possession in 1846, and where the remainder of his life has been passed.

Dec. 21, 1848, he was united in marriage to Miss Margaret, daughter of John D. Carpenter, of Carpenter's Point, whose family were the owners of much valuable property in the immediate vicinity. They have had seven children,—Henry G., John D., Mary Ellen, Esther, Margaret Alice, Martha E., and George, Jr. The survivors of this number are George, Jr., Martha E., and Henry G., the latter of whom was married, Sept. 18, 1878, to Miss Libbie O'Riley, whose death occurred Nov. 29, 1879.

Mr. George Cuddeback has been an unflinching advocate of the principles of the Democracy during his lifetime, though he has never sought office at the hands of his party. His pursuits as well as tastes have led him into the more quiet walks of life. Mr. Cuddeback has been for years a director of the First National Bank of Port Jervis, and a stockholder in each of the banks of that place. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cuddeback are zealous members of the Reformed Dutch Church of Port Jervis.

NATHAN SKINNER.

The Skinner family in America were originally represented by seven brothers who emigrated from England at an early date, four of whom settled in Canada, and the remainder in the United States. At a later period two removed to New York State, and one to New Jersey. Daniel Skinner, the grandfather of Nathan, the subject of this biography, who was descended from one of these brothers, was probably born in New Jersey, and during his minority removed to Orange County, which continued to be his residence until his death. He married Miss Mary Smith, of New York, and had children,—Moses, Jephtha, and Stephen, and seven daughters. Of this number, Moses remained in the county of his birth until 1826, when he removed to Canada. He was married Feb. 17, 1807, to Miss Mary Archa, who was of Scottish ancestry, and whose parents resided at Red Hook, on the Hudson. The following children were theirs: Nelson, Elisha, Nathan, Julia Ann, Moses O., Joseph, Salome, Elizabeth, and Drayton B., each of whom reached mature years. Of this number, Nathan was born near Otisville, in Orange County, Sept. 7, 1816, and spent his early life under the parental roof. He afterwards, in company with his father, repaired to Canada, and later to Ohio. With no resources at command other than those which nature had provided him, and equipped with a brave heart and a ready hand, he began the battle of life. Believing an honest trade to be among the most honorable of employments, he acquired that of a carriage-maker, and in 1839 removed to Port Jervis, where for fourteen years he devoted himself with unremitting industry to his mechanical occupation. Having previously had no opportunities of education, he availed himself on his return to the East of forty days at the public school. The acquirements of Mr. Skinner during this brief period, though of necessity limited, enabled him to gain the rudiments which greatly assisted in his future career. In 1840 he was married to Miss Aseneth, daughter of John D. Carpenter, whose family were early settlers at Carpenter's Point, where his father was an extensive land-owner and largely interested in business enterprises. She is also a direct descendant of Maj. Johannes Decker, of historic memory, whose family early experienced all the horrors incident to Indian and border warfare. Mr. and Mrs. Skinner have been the parents of three children,—Martha Ellen, John N., and Charles N., of whom John N., born in 1844, is the only survivor. He was in 1865 united in marriage to Miss Anne M. Malven, who was born in Stroudsburg, and later removed with her parents to Iowa. They have two children,—Charles N., and John M., both of whom are now pursuing their studies. Nathan Skinner in 1853 retired from business, and three years later purchased his present residence, located on the east bank of the Neversink, and adjoining the corporation of Port Jervis. Since that time he has followed agricultural pursuits, varied by occasional operations in real estate. In politics Mr. Skinner is an ardent and uncompromising Republican. Official life presents for him no attractions; his name will not, therefore, be found upon the roll of office-holders. His religious belief is in harmony with the creed of the Reformed Dutch Church, to which he contributes a liberal support, and of which both Mrs. Skinner and her daughter-in-law are active members.

NATHAN SKINNER.

Levi Van Etten

LEVI VAN ETTEN.

The Van Etten family is closely identified with the development as well as the early settlement of Orange County, and therefore enter largely into the valuable historical data which the denizens of the county have preserved with a commendable zeal. They are also allied by ties of affinity or consanguinity with all the prominent families of the Neversink Valley, and the country contiguous to it. A brief résumé having been already given elsewhere, renders a repetition here unnecessary. The year 1743 witnessed the advent of Anthony Van Etten, the great-grandfather of Henry, in the valley of the Neversink, who was the progenitor of the family in the immediate vicinity. Among his children was Levi, who also had a son of the same name, who married Miss Eleanor Carpenter, and was the father of the following children: Margaret, who became Mrs. Simeon Westfall; John, Jr., Jacob, Benjamin, Levi, Ann Eliza, Solomon, Alva, and Ellen. Of this number, John, Jr., now deceased, entered the political arena at an early day, was for three years supervisor of the township, and at a later period elected sheriff of Orange County, and subsequently served a term as representative in the State Legislature. Levi, a brief sketch of whose life is here embodied, was born April 12, 1822, on the homestead, of which he is now owner. He early engaged in farming pursuits with his father, after a brief time spent in study at the public school of the neighborhood. Upon this spot his industrious but uneventful life has been spent, a portion of the estate having been inherited by him on the death of his father, June 7, 1865, in his seventy-fifth year. Mr. Van Etten was in 1876 married to Mrs. Mary E. Green, daughter of Silas Chapman, of Orange Co., N. Y. The Chapman family emigrated at an early day from England to Saybrook, Conn., and from there to Orange County, from whence they eventually removed to Ohio. Mr. Van Etten has always affiliated with the Democratic party, but has never sought official honors, and consequently never been an office-holder. He is a liberal supporter of the Reformed Dutch Church, of which his wife is an active member.

CORNWALL.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

THE town of Cornwall lies upon the Hudson River, and nearly central along the eastern line of the county. It is bounded north by New Windsor, east by the Hudson River, south by Highlands and Monroe, west by Monroe and Blooming-Grove.

In the act of the supervisors, passed at the annual meeting of 1872, the present south boundary of Cornwall is described as "drawn from Sherwood's Rock, on Hudson River, running thence westerly to a house now or recently occupied by William Lancaster; thence in a direct line to the house of William Chatfield; thence to the house of John Odell; thence to the highest peak of Mount Rascal, to the line of the town of Monroe."

Sherwood's Rock, the initial point on the river, is the steep bluff at the base of Crow's Nest, and is so called from the fact that a man of that name lost his life some years ago by falling over the precipice at that place.

Mr. Lewis Beach, writing in 1873, gives the following description of the remainder of the outline of the town:

"From the intersection with the Monroe line, our town line then runs in a northwest direction along the lands of W. H. Smith (late Robert H. Berdell) until it strikes the southwest corner of the town of Blooming-Grove; thence almost due north along Maj. Sherman's farm and through the village of Salisbury until it reaches the New Windsor line, on the lands of Isaac Denniston. It then takes an easterly direction, and continues straight on to the river, passing a little south of the former Vail's Gate Station on the Newburgh Branch; through Woodward's and (late) Judge George's lands, and coming out at Sloop Hill, just far enough to the south to leave the portly proprietor of the Half-way House in the town of New Windsor. From Sloop Hill the line follows the river down to Sherwood's Rock, the point of beginning."

The area embraced within these boundaries is probably about 15,000 acres. This can only be approximately stated, as there is no accurate information on file at Albany as to the area of towns in this State, and assessors' reports or individual computation are the only authority.

The title to the soil of Cornwall is to be traced back to the patents described in the General History. For convenient reference the following list may be given here. Nearly all of them are wholly within the boundaries of the present town, the remainder are in part:

Mary Ingoldsby and her daughter, Mary Pinhorne, and Mary Pinhorne and John Pinhorne, grandchildren of Mary Ingoldsby, one patent of 4000 acres, and one of 1360 acres, granted Aug. 11, 1720. On this patent Canterbury is situated, and the territory towards the river, Sloop Hill, Cornwall Landing, etc. West of this was a patent to John Lawrence of 2000 acres, dated April 9, 1719; this was the Bethlehem tract. Other patents were Patrick MacGregorie, 500 acres, Aug. 6, 1720, north side of Butter Hill; Ebenezer Wilson and Benjamin Aske, 2000 acres "between the hills in Schunemunk"; John Nelson, 1265 acres, Oct. 4, 1762; Thomas Moore and John Osborne, 1850 acres, March 14, 1775; Henry Townsend, 2000 acres; Smith & Wilkin, 190 acres, April 15, 1768; Smith & Wilkin, a second patent, south of Ingoldsby's, 160 acres, April 15, 1768; Edward Blagg and Johannes Hey, 2000 acres, March 28, 1728, mostly in Blooming-Grove; John Lawrence, 765 acres, April 9, 1719.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

This town comprises a portion of the "Highlands of the Hudson," celebrated in story and song, famous in war and peace, and full of interest in every light in which they may be examined. The mountains, ponds, forests, cloves, and dashing streams constitute landscapes of unsurpassed beauty and grandeur. The surface of the town north of the Highlands is rolling and only moderately hilly; in the south and southwest mountainous. The principal elevations are Cro' Nest, on the boundary of the town of Highlands; Black Rock Hill and Mount Rascal, also on or near the south line of Cornwall; Butter Hill, near the Hudson; and Schunemunk Mountain, near the line of Blooming-Grove. Cro' Nest is 1418 feet above the Hudson. The Hudson River bounds the town on the east; Moodna Creek (Murderer's Creek, or Otterkill) drains the northwest portion of the town. It enters from Blooming-Grove at Salisbury Mills, makes a détour southward to Mountainville Post-office, then flows northeast into the town of New Windsor. In its southern bend it receives three tributary rivulets from the south part of the town.

The Canterbury Creek rises on the slopes of Black Rock Hill, flows northeast through Canterbury village, and enters the Hudson very near the line of New Windsor. South of this are two unimportant rivulets flowing into the Hudson, one at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, the other north of Cro' Nest.

Sutherland's Pond is a fine sheet of water half a mile long, lying under the shadow of Black Rock Hill. In the south part of the town is a mineral spring.

The following passage from Mr. Beach's work is so carefully written, and is evidently the result of such thorough investigation, that no apology is needed for quoting it at this point:

"Of all the remarkable topographical features of our town, that which we may call the Cornwall Basin is the most striking. To gain a complete idea of the beauty and grandeur of this basin the observer must take an elevated site, of which there are plenty along our mountain-slopes, and look down as from a balloon upon the map spread out before him. The eye first grasps the bold and salient features of the view. The rim of the basin, struck in distinct outline against the sky by the Schunemunk, Shawangunk, Duchess, and Cornwall mountains, is first noted. Descending on all sides from the ridge formed by these mountain-peaks stretch the landscapes like the seats in some vast amphitheatre. As the vision narrows the New Windsor and Newburgh plains recede from view, and the eye rests upon a somewhat circumscribed arena which lies almost at our feet.

"This is the Cornwall Basin. It is the result of one of those early upheavals of nature which date back beyond the history of man. As we look upon it we realize but faintly the power of that force within the earth, which when convulsed, tossed up the mountains and framed the valleys. In the great tumult that ensued, as the mountains were raised the waters settled in the valleys, and remained there until their gradual subsidence into rivers.

"Cornwall, New Windsor, and Newburgh were at one time no doubt a huge lake, and continued so until drained by the action of the elements in divorcing Storm-King from Breakneck. Before this interesting event the waters evidently had outlet through the Schunemunk Valley, and thence through the Ramapo to the Jersey flats. This supposition receives strong confirmation from the character of our Cornwall Basin, which runs from northeast to southwest, and is traversed by two considerable ridges of land of uniform shape and lying in a precisely similar direction to that of the basin. These ridges are almost parallel, and were formed by the action of the water in forcing its passage southward. The more northerly one, known as the Townsend Ridge, begins at the Friends' meeting-house on the Depot road, and continues on to the Townsend Hill. Its summit is occupied by the residences of Mr. Raymond, Miss Hedges, and Mrs. H. Townsend. The southerly ridge, called Cromwell Ridge, commences in H. F. Chadeayne's orchard, on the turnpike, as it is sometimes called, and emerges in a ravine near Nicholas Chatfield, Jr.'s house. The land formed by this ridge is owned by Mr. Chadeayne, the Titus estate, Mrs. Cromwell N. Chatfield, Jr., Mrs. Townsend, and Miss Hedges.

"Rising by easy grade to a considerable height above the intervening valleys, with a sufficient breadth of surface and a commanding view of our river and mountain scenery, these ridges are unexceptionably situated for building sites. We hope to see them some day in the early future covered with beautiful villas. Between these two ridges, skirting the Depot road to the south, lies a deep glen, whilst the valleys on the north and south are destined to play an important part in the future growth of Cornwall. The valley to the south, or more strictly southeast, of Cromwell Ridge is somewhat circumscribed in extent, but its limited area is amply compensated by the remarkable beauty of its surroundings. Its shape is triangular, and its sides formed on the south by the Cornwall mountains, on the east by that elevated tract of land known as Highland Park, and on the north by Cromwell Ridge. The land slopes gently from the hillsides to the centre, through which runs a small stream, a tiny rivulet at times, at others a swollen torrent of water. This stream is fed by the springs of the adjacent Highlands, and, running in an easterly direction, forms the pond to the north of the Cornwall track, from which it empties into Idlewild Brook by the old stone house on the West Point road. An outlet to the valley on the east is formed by the defile between Highland Park and the mountains known as the Deer Hill ravine. The outlet on the west is through a gorge which connects the valley in question with the Schunemunk Valley."

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The immediate vicinity north of the Highlands attracted attention at an early day as a favorable place of settlement. Even the "Journal of Robert Juet," written on board the "Half-Moon," sailing under command of Sir Henry Hudson, in 1609, shows a high appreciation of this place. In writing of the return voyage down the river he says, in a passage often quoted,—

"On the nine and twentieth [of September] at three of the clock in the afternoon, we weighed as soon as the ebb came and turned down to the edge of the mountains, or the Northernmost of the mountains, and anchored; because the high land hath many points and a narrow channel, and hath many eddie rounds. So we rode quietly all night in seven fathoms water. The thirtieth was fair weather, and the wind at the Southeast; a stiff gale between the mountains. We rode still the afternoon. The people of this country came aboard us and brought some skins with them, which we bought for knives and trifles. This is a very pleasant place to build a towne on."*

Three-quarters of a century was to pass away, however, before any attempts would be made by the whites to occupy this "pleasant place."

It was not until 1685 that Governor Dongan purchased of the Indians the tract of country along the Hudson from Murderer's Creek on the north to Stony Point on the south, and it was about the year 1694 that this tract was patented to Capt. John Evans, that being the first transfer from the crown. A settlement had, however, been made, as shown in the General History, upon the borders of Cornwall, at Plum Point, and on territory now included in the town of New Windsor. This was by Col. Patrick MacGregorie, and was the first settlement within the limits of the present county of Orange. It is not clear that any of the MacGregorie colony built or lived upon the Cornwall side of the present line. The only fact established upon this point is that David Toshuck built his trading-post on Sloop Hill, and so within the present limits of Cornwall. It is said that a depression in the ground may still be seen marking the cellar excavation. In this company was one McCollom. This family name exists in Orange County at the present time, but it is not known that they are descendants of this early immigrant. Of this colony, also, was Wm. Sutherland (or Southerland). He was the ancestor of the present Sutherland families residing in Cornwall. It appears they constitute the sole representatives of this early settlement now remaining in this section, their successive generations having been in this town, or near it, for nearly two hundred years. It is known that Wm. Sutherland had one son, David Sutherland, and that the latter bought, in 1734, 100 acres of land in the Bethlehem neighborhood. There were, doubtless, other sons of William Sutherland, as it is evident several of the numerous branches of the family at the present time do not trace their line through David.

Miss Mills, residing at Canterbury, now in advanced years, whose mother was a Sutherland, states that it has always been a family tradition that the wife of an early Sutherland was a MacGregorie. Doubtless this was the William Sutherland associated in the settlement with Col. MacGregorie. Additional facts are given with reference to this family below. It is there shown that one Alexander Sutherland (father of three brothers) died in 1777. It is probable that he was a brother of David, and a son of William.

There is a tradition, alluded to by various writers, that a settlement of Germans was made at an early day (perhaps the date of Palatine emigration is meant, 1709 to 1712) on the plains a little south of Canterbury; that they remained a few years and then removed to other German settlements near Albany or elsewhere. Neither names nor exact locations are given in these traditional accounts, and nothing is substantiated concerning any such settlement. The tradition arises, doubtless, from the well-known fact that companies of the Palatines were employed to cut ship-timber in various places; that for that purpose they were temporarily encamped, spending a few weeks or months in any given locality. Canterbury was very likely one such point, and that is all there was of an early German settlement.

The MacGregorie settlement is believed to have been continuous,—that after 1685 there was never a time when settlers were not living in this vicinity. How soon their locations extended out upon the territory which is now embraced in Cornwall is not ascertained.

The date of the patents already given affords some guide for determining this matter. The Rip Van Dam Patent was obtained in 1709, and settlements followed soon after in the vicinity of Salisbury, now in Blooming-Grove. Several of the other patents range or date from 1719 to 1722. Upon the John Lawrence Patent of 1719 there was a settlement by Mr. Mandeville in 1728.

Taking the earliest of these dates, however, there is left a period of thirty years succeeding 1685 of which there is little account, and thirty more in which the information is only fragmentary, as to the present town of Cornwall. The fact is clear that the territory now constituting Cornwall was not settled, except in the Bethlehem neighborhood and near Salisbury, until a few years preceding the Revolution. All the early records of Cornwall at the organization as a precinct separate from Goshen in 1764 show that the population was mostly in Monroe and Blooming-Grove. If the records of Goshen Precinct from 1720 to 1764 had not been destroyed, much light might have been obtained as to the names of officers elected upon this territory, the laying out of roads, and all those details of town business in which names and localities are often very fully given.

At the formation of the precinct of Cornwall in 1764 a book of records was opened by the new precinct officers. This is preserved in good condition, and is now in the office of the town clerk of Blooming-Grove. It is a volume of great value, and should be rebound and kept in a fire-proof vault. Liberal extracts are made from this volume under the head of "Organization," below, and these furnish the means of determining many of the families who were residing upon the present territory of Cornwall in the period just preceding the Revolutionary war, as well as upon the territory of the other three towns erected from Old Cornwall, viz.: Blooming-Grove, Monroe, and Highlands.

* Probably the "Half-Moon" was anchored on the opposite side of the river, but all the more clearly were the lands upon the west side seen from the deck or from the higher lands upon the eastern shore.

*The names of those persons who are known or supposed to have been residing on the territory of Monroe, Blooming-Grove, and Highlands have been transferred to the chapters devoted to those towns. There are retained in this list those ascertained to have been residing upon the present territory of Cornwall before the Revolution.

SETTLERS PRIOR TO THE REVOLUTION.

Timothy Brewster. He was chosen in 1765 an overseer of the highway for "the water-side." It is inferred that he lived further east than most of the Brewsters, who were in Blooming-Grove.

Jeremiah Clark. He was chosen in 1765 a fence-viewer for New Cornwall, and was path-master for district No. 1 in 1775. Either he or another of the same name was supervisor in 1791-93, and town clerk still later. Jeremiah Clark was also one of the judges of the county in 1788. He had also served in the first Provincial Congress, April 20, 1775. It is evident that his homestead was in Cornwall, probably in the vicinity of Canterbury, or further east. Other Clarks mentioned in the early records are Reuben, Smith, Ephraim, Gershom, Nehemiah, David, William, John W. (See Biography of Thomas C. Ring.)

Joseph Chandler, Jr. There were probably three of the same name in succession, father, son, and grandson, as there was a Joseph Chandler, Jr., supervisor as late as 1812, thirty-seven years later than the first mention appears. The homestead was in the north-west part of Cornwall.

Thomas Clark, Sr. and Jr. It is said that the Thomas Clark homestead was on the site of the present Smith boarding-house at "the Corners," now better known as Cornwall-on-the-Hudson.

David Mandeville. An old Mandeville homestead was the present place of the Episcopal rectory in the village of Canterbury, but before the Revolution the family were probably on the John Lawrence Patent.

Amos Mills. He was a justice of the peace in 1765. He lived in Canterbury, in a dwelling, long since removed, that stood near Sutherland's present law-office. He had a farm near there. His children were Amos, Jr., who kept the present James A. Smith store, beyond the stone bridge; Zachariah, who moved West; Zebadiah, who died unmarried; Mrs. Isaac Van Duzer; Mrs. John Barton, her husband being a very early merchant in Canterbury. The children of Amos, Jr., were Mrs. James Hawkshurst; Mrs. Daniel Hal-let, of Monroe; Mrs. Peter Neels, of Troy; and Elizabeth (our informant), still living.

David Miller was path-master of district No. 6 in 1775. The number of the district, compared with others, indicates that he was on the present territory of Cornwall before the Revolution.

Langford Thorn. As he deeded to the Friends in 1789 a part of the ground yet occupied by the meeting west of Canterbury village, it is to be inferred that his homestead was near that point. Daniel Thorn, a son of Langford, is mentioned in the old records. He lived on the present Raymond place.

Joseph Thorn. He was path-master of district No. 7 in 1775. He was the early merchant of Salisbury. In company with Nicholas Townsend, of Monroe, he went with two wagons to Philadelphia and purchased goods during the Revolutionary war. A quantity of tin was brought home and made into various articles. Miss Phebe Cock, of Canterbury, has boxes then made from that tin. Mr. Thorn was from Long Island. He never married; a maiden sister kept house for him.

Jonathan Brooks. He was one of the Committee of Safety for Cornwall in 1775. He lived on the Rip Van Dam Patent, out towards Salisbury.

A. Sutherland was path-master of district No. 14 in 1775. There were three brothers of the Sutherlands about the time of the Revolution or a little later,—1. Alexander, whose children were Alexander (father of John D., our informant), Andrew, David, and Mrs. John BuBois. 2. David, whose children are not given. 3. Andrew, whose children were Daniel and David, both of whom went West, the latter being a lawyer of note. The father of these three brothers was also Alexander. He was buried the day Fort Montgomery was captured, and the family tradition is that the friends at the grave, hearing the distant firing, thought the British were coming over the mountains, and ran away from the grave.

Nathaniel Sands was a son of David Sands, the well-known Friends' preacher. The homestead is still well known as the Sands' place in Canterbury. David Sands had no other sons, according to the recollection of Miss Phebe Cock, from whom some of these items are obtained, but there were three daughters,—Mrs. Charles Newbold, Mrs. Elias Ring, and Marietta, who died young.

David Sutherland, Sr. and Jr. The son was chosen constable in 1775 "for the water-side." Of Maj. John D. Sutherland we learn that the homestead of this branch of the family was a part of the well-known Sackett or Lewis Beach farm. The name of David Sutherland is in the militia rolls of 1738, very probably the senior above named.

David Sherod (Sherwood?) was chosen in 1765 an overseer of the highway "for the water-side." This does not entirely agree with tradition, which supposes him to have lived in Monroe, and sold to Nicholas Townsend the present Stephen Smith place. Between 1765 and the Revolution was, however, time enough to have purchased one there, and to have sold again.

Justus Sackett was chosen a constable in 1765 "for the water-side." His location is not determined, though at some later period the old Sutherland property, now of Lewis Beach, became known as the Sackett place.

Isaac Tobias was the early physician in the west part of the town. His homestead was the William Halstead place of modern times, near Salisbury. Isaac Tobias died in 1808. A grandson, Daniel Tobias, is still living, a hale and hearty octogenarian. Frederick Tobias was also mentioned as path-master of district 36 in 1775.

William Roe was chosen path-master for district No. 2 in 1775. His homestead was near the bounds of New Windsor, in the Plum Point neighborhood.

Isaac Van Duzer, Sr. and Jr. The younger was path-master in 1775 for district No. 31. There are also mentioned in the records prior to the Revolution, C. Van Duzer, I. Van Duzer (3), Jacob Van Duzer, and Christopher Van Duzer.

Joseph Wood was a fence-viewer in 1765 for "New Cornwall." Inferring that this was to designate his district separate from the districts of Blooming-Grove, Oxford, etc., in the precinct of Cornwall, it may be concluded that he lived in what is now Cornwall. There are also mentioned Daniel Wood, Stephen Wood, John Wood, Amos Wood, Timothy Wood, and Ebenezer Wood, the last named being commissioner of highways in 1775.

The remaining names from the records of Cornwall, 1765 to 1775, or from among the signatures to the Articles of Association at the opening of the war of the Revolution, are given below. About 50 have been mentioned above as located on the territory now embraced in Cornwall; about 100 are transferred to the chapter on Monroe as settlers before the Revolution in that town; 130 to the chapter upon Blooming-Grove, giving, it is believed, the names of all the principal families who were in that town prior to the Revolution; and to the chapter upon the new town of Highlands about 20 as possibly living on the territory now embraced in that town before the Revolution. It must also be observed that the list undoubtedly covers a very large section of what is now Rockland County, the boundaries of Cornwall Precinct extending at that time from Murderer's to Tappan Creek (ante, pp. 13, 14), and with the exception of Haverstraw and Orangetown, taking in the whole of Rockland as well as the towns in Orange already named.

The early settlement and subsequent growth of this town is shown still further under various heads, as churches, military, trade and commerce; reference being made to the chapters of the General History for much valuable material with reference to this subject.

In 1821 justices of the peace appointed for Cornwall were William A. Clark, Nathaniel Ring, and Nathan Westcott.

Joseph Thorn, the merchant at Salisbury a hundred years ago and more, has been mentioned, and Isaac Van Duzer, at the landing, about the beginning of this century.

Considering the period of 1820 to 1830 the following notes may be given: John E. Chadeayne came from Connecticut about 1821, and was for a time in business in a store then standing near the present Library Hall, opposite Driscoll's public-house. May 25, 1825, his father, Daniel Chadeayne, reached here from Connecticut and with his son formed a mercantile partnership, which was continued for many years. They traded at Canterbury in the store—now an old land-mark—beyond the stone bridge, and still occupied as a store by James Otis Smith. Mr. Chadeayne had three children: John E., mentioned above; Henry F.; and a daughter, Mrs. Henry P. Husted. The firm was John E. Chadeayne & Co. John E. Chadeayne retired from trade after six or eight years. His father continued the store alone for a short time, and then Henry F. Chadeayne went into trade there, and continued, with the exception of a year or two when he went South, until 1860, a period of more than twenty years. Since that time the old store has been in the hands of various proprietors: Cordon & Birdsall, Daniel L. Birdsall, John L. Davis, Ferguson & Crane, Ferguson alone, Charles S. Ostrander, Denniston & Ward, and finally the present proprietor, James O. Smith. During the absence of Henry F. Chadeayne mentioned above James M. Adams carried on the store.

The brick store, now a meat-market, near the Union Hotel, is an old place of trade, first kept by Richard Williams, fifty or sixty years ago; afterwards by Nathan Beers, John E. Chadeayne, Henry P. Husted, Samuel H. Purdy, Henry F. Chadeayne (for a short time after returning from Savannah), then by James W. Adams.

There was a store for many years where the drug-store of Peter P. Hazen is now located, kept by Seaman & Dusenberry, 1835 to 1840, or about that time.

The old store of Lewis Barrett was where the engine-house is now located. He was succeeded by James M. Barrett, Henry Rountree, and Joseph Ferguson. On the corner below was a store by Cock & Purdy, as early as 1830, afterwards kept by Samuel G. Purdy, by Victor M. and George W. Purdy, the former also trading for a time alone, then by James M. Barrett for some years. Subsequent proprietors were L. P. Bayard, Barrett & Monell, James Milvane, and Charles Ostrander. Before Cock & Purdy it was a very early store by Samuel Purdy.

At the dock the old store of Isaac Van Duzer was succeeded by Weeks & Griffin, by McFarlan, and by Livingston.

Edward Falls kept store opposite the Union Hotel.

Nathan Clark, yet in trade, commenced business about 1827, and now after more than fifty years he is found at the same place. He has a general country store, transacts from his dock shipping business, deals in coal, as well as a large miscellaneous business.

Dr. Isaac Tobias was an early physician, living in the west part of the town. He practiced for many years. Other physicians of a later period were Dr. Alexander Clinton, who lived at Canterbury, on the present Edwards place; afterwards removed to New York and died there. Dr. Elihu Hedges, who had an extensive ride far and near, dying in 1824, young and in the midst of an active career, his homestead now being owned by his daughter, Miss Mary T. Hedges. Dr. Heaton, who practiced for many years, and whose son-in-law, Dr. John M. Gough, was in partnership with him for a time. A grandson, Dr. Thomas Heaton, is now in practice in this town. Contemporary with Dr. Gough was Dr. Ball, who removed to Brooklyn. Dr. William Morrison acquired an extensive practice, and became a physician of much note. He died in 1853 or 1854.

As to where the earliest tavern was located there is little evidence. Doubtless there was one at the dock.

There was no doubt one at a very early date in Canterbury; also in Bethlehem, and at Salisbury. As for the great leading public roads it is usually safe to calculate that in the era preceding the opening of railways about every alternate house was a tavern. A search among the loose papers of the town clerk's office and among the books reveals no "license lists," such as may be found in some towns nearly a hundred years old. The destruction of the papers of the town clerk's offices (sometimes purposely by a strange inconsiderateness) blocks the way in many cases to any positive information. There is probably not a town that did not have at one time or another all the materials for a full history on this and similar points. If towns will burn their old papers, their old road surveys, and their old assessment-rolls, defects must be expected in any minute history.

Isaac R. Van Duzer, a native of this town, practiced law from 1825 to 1830, or about that time, and removed to Goshen. George M. Grier practiced law in Cornwall fifty years ago, continuing for several years. Benjamin H. Mace, of Newburgh, came to Cornwall a year or so during his early career as a lawyer. Ebenezer C. Sutherland, a native of this town, was a practicing lawyer for many years. His son, Daniel E. Sutherland, is an attorney at the present time in Canterbury. At Cornwall-on-the-Hudson are three lawyers, William H. Clark, Daniel E. Pope, and Charles H. Fuller.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

The precinct of Cornwall was organized in 1764, and comprised the eastern or river portion of the earlier Goshen Precinct. The dividing line was so drawn that nearly all of the territory comprising the present towns of Blooming-Grove, Cornwall, Highlands, and Monroe were included in the new precinct. The following interesting extracts from the records, comprising the first precinct-meeting of 1765, throw not only considerable direct light upon the civil history, but also furnish the most reliable data for determining the names of the early settlers.

FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

"At a meeting of the freeholders and inhabitants of the precinct of Cornwall, in the county of Orange, on the first Tuesday in April, 1765, at the house of John Brewster in Blooming-Grove, pursuant to an act of the Lieutenant-Governor, Council, and General Assembly of the Province of New York for that purpose.

"Present—Selah Strong, Nathaniel Jayne, David Smith, and Amos Mills, Esqs., Justices of the Peace.

"Voted, John Brewster, Sr., clerk; Hezekiah Howell, Sr., supervisor; John Brewster, David Smith, and Zachariah Dubois, commissioners of highways; Jeremiah Coleman, assessor; John Hudson, collector; Elihu Marvin and Samuel Moffatt, overseers of the poor; John Hudson, constable for Blooming-Grove; Hophni Smith, constable for Smith's Clove; J. Sackett, constable for the water side; John Woolley, overseer of the road from the new meeting-house to Martin Remilies; Bazaliel Seely, for Oxford, from Israel Seely's to Gregory's; Joseph Hildrige, from the new road to Goshen road; Nathaniel Seely, from James Sear's to Saterlie's mill; Hezekiah Howell, for Blag's Clove; Steven Gilbert, for Goshen road, from the precinct line to the Otterkill; Josiah Reader, from the Otterkill to Coll Matthews'; Joseph Chandler, from Coll Matthews' to county line; Francis Drake, from Henry Mapes' to Thomas Mapes'; James Halsted, from Teed's bridge on new road to Sterling; Benjamin Strong, from the meeting-house to Adam Collins' and to the new school-house; Thomas Smith, from John Earle's to Cave's; Joel Tuthill, from Curtis Coleman's to Nathaniel Curtis' mill, and so along to the Round Hill; Richard Goldsmith, from John Brewster's to Gilbert's; Silas Youngs, from the end of Oxford road to R. Youngs'; Benjamin Gregory, from his house to Oxford; David Sherod and Timothy Brewster, overseers for the water side; David Smith, from Gregory's to John Earle's on the Clove road; Juli Smith, from his house to Car's, and from his house to Dunbar's; Elihu Marvin and Archibald Little, fence-viewers for Oxford; Austin Smith and John Earles, for Woodbury Clove; Joseph Wood and Jeremiah Clark, for New Cornwall; John Brewster and David Coleman for Blooming-Grove."

At this time the town was very large, embracing the present towns of Cornwall, Blooming-Grove, and Monroe, with a part of Chester.

The justices of the peace during this period of ten years were Selah Strong, Nathaniel Jayne, David Smith, Amos Mills, Archibald Little, William Thorn, Henry Wisner, Silvanus White, John Griffith.

In 1777 the precinct-meetings were conducted under the direction of four committee-men in place of the justices. In that year the committee were Elihu Marvin, Thomas Moffatt, Daniel Coleman, and Samuel Strong.

Thus far it does not appear that the precinct had adopted a set of laws for its government, such as we find in other precincts. Though the precinct appointed overseers of the poor, yet the records do not show that any poor money was raised for their support during these ten years. The precinct brand in 1774 was the letter C. In 1875, £60 was raised for support of the poor; in 1787, £25; in 1788, £30; in 1789, £30. It does not appear how the poor were supported, or that the poor-masters ever accounted to the precinct or its officers for the expenditure of the money.

In 1793 they began to adopt regulations to govern the town, and among them that a pound be built near John Brewster's, Blooming-Grove; one near John Barton's, Murderer's Creek; one at John Weygant's, Smith's Clove; and a pair of stocks at each pound. This was a rigid beginning. The fences to be built four feet four inches high, thick and strong. In 1797 every ram found running at large was to be sold for the use of the poor.

In 1769, Selah Strong, William Thorn, Henry Wisner, Jr., and Sylvanus White, four of His Majesty's justices, declared the indenture of the apprentice James Simmons void by the ill treatment of his master, and discharged the apprentice.

1788, Capt. Tuthill and Richard Goldsmith were appointed a committee to go to Capt. Sloat's to consult with a county committee.

The records appear to have been very regularly kept from the beginning, but principally confined to the election of town officers, districting roads, recording them, and appointing overseers. There is very little variety and less legislation found in them.

For the same purpose of showing names and locations, we turn to the records at a point twenty-three years later, and give in full the officers elected at the town-meeting of 1798.

This meeting, the last before the division (and probably the first held anywhere else except at John Brewster's), assembled at the house of John Weygant, in Smith's Clove, on the first Tuesday in April, 1798. There were present and presiding as justices of the peace Joseph Chandler, Obadiah Smith, Anselm Helms, and Michael Hey. The officers chosen were as follows, viz.:

Town Clerk, James D. Secor; Supervisor, Anselm Helms; Commissioners of Roads, John McDowell, Wm. Clark, Daniel Knowlton; Assessors, Obadiah Smith, Michael Hey, Richard Goldsmith, Paul Howell, Henry Mansfield, Moses Cunningham; Collector, Daniel Knowlton; Overseers of the Poor, Daniel Knowlton, Josiah Seeley, Jr.; Constables, Henry Mansfield, Amos Whitmore, Silas Aldridge, Henry Danes, Thomas Knowlton, Jeremiah Trickay, Benjamin Rowe, Obadiah Cunningham, Daniel Knowlton, Samuel Smith; Commissioners of Schools, Zephaniah Halsey, Wm. Denniston, Thomas North, Seth Marvin, James D. Secor, Obadiah Smith.

The path-masters were:

V.—VILLAGES, NEIGHBORHOODS, Etc.

CORNWALL

as a name of early times, properly belongs to the landing-place on the river, though the name can scarcely be located at the present time.

Daniel Tobias did business as a shipper there about the beginning of this century. He sailed a sloop as shown below. Isaac Van Duzer was a merchant about the same time. His name appears in connection with much of the early public business. Mr. Lewis Beach, in his recent work upon Cornwall, gives the following account of the commerce of this river-port.

At the beginning of the present century the freighting business was done from a dock which stood near the Gillis brick-yard of modern times. It was reached by a road through the ravine which skirts the Ryckman estate on the north. From this point Capt. Daniel Tobias sailed a sloop, and kept a store near the landing. The name of Tobias is closely associated with the freighting business for nearly half a century. Capt. Daniel S. Tobias of recent times, and superintendent of the salmon warehouse for many years, was grandson of Dr. Isaac Tobias. The latter lived on the William Halstead place, near Salisbury, and died there in 1808. The father of Daniel S., whose name was Isaac S. (a brother of Daniel), removed from the old dock in 1807, and erected the house occupied in late years by the oarsman, Josh Ward. At this time there was no direct communication between the river and the table-land above. He built the road at his own expense as far as the first bridge, where it connected with the present road to Willisville, which latter road was then in existence.

Capt. Nathaniel Ring also sailed a sloop from the old dock. He afterwards built the dock at the landing owned in modern times by Mead & Taft. There was also the old dock at the foot of Sloop Hill, long since gone to decay. In 1810, Capt. Reuben Reynolds came from New Windsor, and raised the house occupied in recent times by Charles Brown, and built the dock in front of it, afterwards used as a coal-yard. About that time also Capts. Reynolds and Tobias built and launched the sloop "Hamlet." In 1812, Capt. Tobias sold out to Isaac Van Duzer, and retired to a farm in the west end of the town.

The Clark dock, the most southerly one, was built about 1827 by Nathan Clark. Capt. Daniel S. Tobias began his river-life at that time, going before the mast under command of Capt. Reynolds. At the same time † After this date elected by the people at the annual town-meetings.

Capt. John Sifferth sailed the sloop "Exchange" for Isaac Van Duzer. A new era now took place in transportation which has revolutionized the commerce of the world. In 1828, Capt. Isaac Van Duzer built the first steamboat for freighting purposes ever constructed on the river. It was cautiously named the "Experiment," and boldly belied its name by proving a success. The shipwright was Silas Corwin. The craft was built at New Windsor. Her boilers and engine were furnished by Isaiah and John Townsend, of Albany. She was run for several years by Isaac Van Duzer, and then sold to Weeks & Griffin. Weeks at that time kept the hotel that in later years became the Charles Brown place. Weeks & Griffin sold the boat to Henry Bertholf & Co., who ran her four or five years. She next became the property of Hudson McFarland, Mr. Mitchell, Dr. Morrison, and Capt. Tobias. The latter ran her for a year, when her engine became disabled, and it was not thought best to repair it. This venerable pioneer boat was then converted into a barge, and sailed as such from New Windsor under the command of Capt. Dyer Brewster.

Upon the retirement of the "Experiment," the steamboat "Wave" took her place, but only for a few months. The next year the "Union" was put on and officered by Capt. Tobias. Then came the "General Jackson," acting as tow to the Newburgh and New Windsor barges. The completion of the Erie Railroad to Piermont struck a fatal blow to the freighting interests of Cornwall. This occurred in 1837. Up to this period a large portion of the produce of the back country for a distance of thirty miles had sought tide-water at Cornwall. The farmers' wagons often formed an extended line near the landing awaiting their turn to unload. The principal articles of shipment were hay, straw, butter, hoop-poles ("mountain wheat," as they were called), farm produce, hickory-wood, bricks, and live stock. The "General Jackson" was followed by the "Gazelle," which ran as far as Poughkeepsie, and merely called at Cornwall. The "Columbia" succeeded the "Gazelle." About 1856, Henry Clark bought the "Orange County," and placed her on the line between Cornwall and the city. She was run by Capt. Joseph Ketchum, and continued her trips down to 1864. During this period the culture of small fruits, especially the Antwerp, had been embarked in, and fruit formed an important item of freight.

The name Cornwall, as applied to a village, has scarcely any definite location. The post-office Cornwall is at Canterbury, while nearer the Hudson is the post-office Cornwall-on-the-Hudson.

CANTERBURY.

This is by far the oldest village in the town, and is also the largest in population. The modern growth of all this section has connected this village to the other villages in the vicinity, though there are lines of separation which residents understand, however much they may puzzle a casual visitor to distinguish.

The name was applied to the place at an early day, and was very likely suggested by emigrants from England, in memory of Canterbury, situated in the County of Kent. The small stream passing through this village was known as Canterbury Creek. In later years near the Hudson it is known as Idlewild Brook, from the location there of the country-seat of the poet, N. P. Willis. The water-power furnished by this stream was formerly of considerable value, and several mills were located upon its banks. The brick factory occupied in modern times by James Winne as a joiner-shop was formerly used as a tannery. John Cromwell was the proprietor, and continued this business until the scarcity of bark led to its abandonment. The mill beside the Willow Avenue bridge, now the Taylor planing-mill, was run by J. H. and W. Atkinson as a yarn- and woolen-mill.

The earliest settlement in this section was not on the present site of Canterbury, but a little to the south, on the plain at the base of the mountains. A very early house is spoken of by a recent writer as that of Patrick Sutherland, which stood on the Justus Sackett farm. No trace of it now remains. It is said that a stone taken from this house may still be seen in the wall before the residence of Mrs. Concklin, on Clinton Street, bearing the inscription, "P. S. & W. S., 1747." This is supposed to indicate the date when the house mentioned was built.

There are many fine residences in Canterbury. Pleasant drives abound in every direction. In the near vicinity are charming glens, mountain-slopes, forests still wild and dense; while a few miles away are the bold, storm-swept summits of the Highlands, and places rich in legendary lore, as well as in the memories of the Revolutionary age.

The village hotel, known as the Union House, is kept by Mrs. Moore. It has been a well-known house of public entertainment for a long series of years. It is a pleasant, quiet, home-like place, not ambitious of the rush of summer travel, but offering many attractions to the traveler in the way of excellent table, pleasant rooms, and quiet, courteous attention.

CORNWALL-ON-THE-HUDSON.

This is the name of the post-office located on the upland above the older village at the river, and yet east of Canterbury. The growth of a fine village at this point rendered post-office facilities desirable, and the name is appropriate, as the post-office "Cornwall" is located at Canterbury, while this new office supplies the section between Canterbury and the river. The office was established Jan. 1, 1862, and Charles E. Cock appointed postmaster. He was succeeded in June, 1877, by the present incumbent, Leonard N. Wyant. The office was raised to a third-class office Jan. 1, 1879. In this immediate vicinity there are several pleasant boarding-houses for summer guests, the Cornwall Library building, the Temperance Hall, and a number of stores.

The place is also known as "the Corners," from the number of roads which intersect here. It is also designated Willisville, in honor of N. P. Willis, whose residence was not far away.

IDLEWILD.

This is the name given by the late N. P. Willis to his country-seat on the southern bank of Canterbury Creek, and near to the Hudson. He had spent some time in this vicinity, and was charmed with the climate, as exceedingly favorable to recovery from pulmonary disease, with which he was afflicted. He finally purchased a tract, and erected a handsome villa-residence. The name is said to have arisen from the reply of a friend when Mr. Willis was examining the glen and the rough, unpromising locality, "Oh," said his friend, "this is nothing but an idle wild." The passing phrase, caught up by the fancy of the poet, was at once bestowed upon the place. Here, in these retired shades, he passed the remaining years of his life, rendering the secluded nook and all the surrounding country famous by the charming productions of his pen.

His location here and his enthusiastic descriptions of the delightful scenery and pure air of Cornwall undoubtedly had much influence in inducing others to come to Cornwall, and giving an impulse to the growth of the village. Even business men are ready to pay tribute not only to the memory of his genius as a writer of poetry and the most charming of prose, but as in many respects the patron, almost the founder, of modern Cornwall. The world knew Idlewild through the writings of Mr. Willis, and in seeking Idlewild they discovered Cornwall. The name has found ready acceptance in this community. The creek long known as Canterbury has become Idlewild Brook, there is Idlewild Avenue, Idlewild Lodge, and Idlewild post-office. The latter is, however, so far away from Idlewild itself as to be another specimen of the incongruous nomenclature existing in this locality. The Idlewild post-office is at the station on the Short-Cut Newburgh Branch Railway, three miles or more from the residence of the late Mr. Willis.

The people of this growing place will surely have to resort to incorporation to save themselves from a flood of names and from an astonishing confusion in their application. Idlewild is three miles from Idlewild; Cornwall is Canterbury; Canterbury is Cornwall; Cornwall-on-the-Hudson is not on the Hudson, but another village is that perhaps was Cornwall once, but it is not certain what its name now is, though it may be Riverside; and besides there is Willisville, Roeville, Garnerville, and "the Corners," all in use on the same territory, to say nothing of Glen Ridge, Angola, Montana, and others waiting along the borders for a chance to enter the devoted town.

is one of the local names at once convenient and confusing. It designates a cluster of buildings between Canterbury and "the Corners," erected on property formerly belonging to a colored man of that name who died some years ago. The houses are of a simple, plain character, and occupied in the main by laborers and mechanics. The Catholic church is in this locality.

RIVERSIDE.

This is the new name given to what in this article we have called "Cornwall," namely, the landing and the village lying along the river near it. This has also been known as "the Hollow," or simply "The Landing." Its present business (1880) may be briefly stated as follows: Boat-house and boats to let by P. Clark; the same business by Dan. and Ed. Ward; Mead & Taft's lumber-yard, etc., mentioned elsewhere; Highland Hotel, by Charles M. Brown; the Ward House, by the celebrated oarsman, Josh. Ward; Seaman's store, dry goods and groceries; Jonas McLaughlin, boots and shoes; the old store of Nathan Clark, with the dock established by him fifty years ago; a coal-yard, by Wm. Hunter; a dry-dock or "ways," not much used now; and last but not least, the old central dock, the well-known Carpenter property, at which all the passenger boats land.

ROEVILLE.

This hamlet is north of the Idlewild Brook, on the road from Canterbury to Newburgh. It is named from Mr. James G. Roe, whose fine summer resort, known as Glen Ridge House, occupies a beautiful and commanding summit near. The village lies along the east part of Hunter Avenue, which extends from the Newburgh road to Willow Avenue. The Glen Ridge House is a spacious building, conveniently arranged to accommodate a large number of guests. The grounds are extensive, and winding walks along the deep wild glen to the east lead guests into the very depths of nature's secluded haunts.

THE MONTANA WOOLEN-MILLS

have developed something of a village around them. They are situated on Murderer's Creek, near the north line of the town. The following editorial description recently appeared in the village paper:

"Montana is a hamlet on Moodna Creek, at the foot of Willow Avenue, about one mile from the village of Cornwall (Canterbury), and mainly consists of the dwellings of the operatives of the mill, the principal street being a continuation of Willow Avenue, terminating at the iron bridge near Mr. Orr's flour-mills. The village is pleasantly situated, the woollen-mill occupying the eastern end. The building inclosing the machinery where the fabrics are made, is four stories high, 50 feet wide, and 276 feet long. We first ascended to the fourth story, where we found six sets of cards, consisting of eighteen machines, all in active operation. These machines receive the raw wool at the first machine, which cleans it and passes it on to the second, where it is carded and passed on to the third. There it is again carded and formed into a cord and wound upon rollers ready for the spinning-mules, which are on the floor below. There are four of these machines, all double, and, together with four sets of patent punched goods machines, occupy the whole floor. On the second floor are thirty-eight fancy looms, and the latest patent machinery for finishing goods. On the lower floor are washing and drying apparatus, the dye-room, containing six large kettles boiled by steam, capable of dyeing 1000 pounds of wool a day, the boiler and engine-room. The engine is a splendid specimen of the skill of the Wright works of Newburgh, and cost 80 horse-power. The boilers are also 80 horse-power each. In addition to steam they use water-power, having a fall of twenty feet and a turbine wheel.

One hundred and twenty-five operatives, men, women, boys, and girls, are constantly employed, who turn out from the looms 400 yards, and from the patent machines 50 yards daily,—total 1200 yards, cassimeres, overcoatings, and ladies' cloakings, single and double widths; all of which is sold in New York City. The water-power is frequently used six months in the year, and the average consumption of coal per year is 600 tons. The office of the mills is in a building a little higher up the hill. Mr. Broadhead has now carried on this extensive business for eleven years, having purchased the mill in 1869, with the usual ups and downs of manufacturing life, and it is anticipated that when the new railroad is completed from Middletown to New York a greater impulse will be given to this as well as other manufactures."

MOUNTAINVILLE

is a village in the southwest part of the town, near the southern bend of Murderer's Creek. It is a station upon the Newburgh Branch (Short-Cut) of the Erie Railroad. A post-office was established at this place one year after the railroad was opened. The post-master appointed was John Orr, who retains the office to the present time (1880). The village has a location of much beauty, including choice scenery in the valleys of both the Moodna and the Ramapo. It has had considerable additions since the opening of the railroad. It is near to the mineral spring, and for this and other reasons it is receiving a fair share of the summer travel, and many boarders remain for several weeks in the delightful locality.

SALISBURY MILLS

post-office accommodates a portion of the town of Cornwall, but the village is mostly within the town of Blooming-Grove, to which reference is made for further particulars.

BETHLEHEM

is a neighborhood in the northwest part of the town on the public road leading from New Windsor to Goshen, and about five miles southwest of the former village. The name was first applied to the Presbyterian church established there in early times; as mentioned elsewhere. Afterwards the neighborhood became known by the same designation. During the Revolutionary war a part of the American army was encamped for a time near the church.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

There are little or no accounts extant of the schools of this town prior to the Revolution, nor for several succeeding years. A school-house is occasionally mentioned in early road surveys of the eastern part of Orange County, or in other documents. Such schools as existed in those pioneer times were sustained by private effort, and were established by combinations of neighbors without any district organizations.

Under a law of the State, passed about the year 1795, something of public organization was attempted, and a small sum of money was apportioned by the board of supervisors. Under this law the following citizens were chosen commissioners of schools in 1796, and also in 1797: Zephaniah Halsey, William Denniston, Seth Marvin, Thomas North, James D. Secor, Obadiah Smith.

In 1799 there were chosen to the same office Joseph Chandler, Obadiah Smith, and Jonathan Cooley. No further official action by the town took place until the passage of the new act of 1812, organizing the general school system of the State.

The following persons served one or more years each as school commissioners during the period from 1813 to 1843: Joseph Chandler, Jr., Samuel Van Duzer, Thomas Carpenter, Jr., William A. Clark, Isaac Van Duzer, Cornwall S. Roe, William Sayre, Stephen Crissey, John Denniston, Thomas F. Fish,* Isaac Cock, Samuel Townsend, Thomas F. Fish, Bartholomew Mailler, Isaac Seaman, James Van Duzer, Francis Clark, Francis E. Weygant, Samuel Ketcham, Cornelius H. Clark, Horatio N. Woodward, David Parry, James Barton, Francis T. Benjamin, William H. Carpenter. Three of these were continued in office for a long series of years,—Isaac Van Duzer, William A. Clark, and John Denniston.

During the same period the following persons were chosen inspectors of common schools and served one or more years each: Isaac Van Duzer, Elihu Hedges, Campbell Faurot, N. Barton, John B. Havens, William Sayre, Noah Townsend, Gilbert Webb, Cornwall S. Roe, Artemus Dean, David Haven, Richard A. Kronkhyte, John Smith, Nathan Westcott, David S. Ring, Gilbert C. Peet, John Owens, John M. Gough, Samuel H. Purdy, Isaac R. Van Duzer, Thomas F. Fish, Alexander Clinton, Ebenezer C. Sutherland, John L. Dusenberry, Oliver Cromwell, Nathan Smith, William Morrison, William P. Cock, Theophilus R. Burchard, Eleazer Crane, Evans Davis, Bartholomew Mailler, Henry F. Chadeayne, William Hill, Isaac Faurot, Zabine J. D. Kinsley.

After the adoption of the method of supervision by town superintendents the following persons served in that office in Cornwall. Annual elections: 1844-47, James Barton. Biennial elections: 1848-54, James Barton; 1856, Ephraim Goodman. The one last named was not sworn in, as district commissioners superseded the town superintendents in June, several months before the official term of superintendent commenced. From that date to the present time the supervision of the schools has been wholly removed from the town authorities.

Of the present public schools it is proper to say that they are under excellent management, are well attended, and are accommodated generally in good buildings. The school at Willisville is worthy of special mention. The building devoted to it is located near Library Hall, and was erected in 1868 at a cost of about $12,500. The money was raised at the time by the issue of bonds, all of which were subsequently paid according to their terms. About $2600 more was afterwards expended in the purchase of maps, furniture, and other appointments. The building is of brick, 60 by 82, and contains six classrooms besides a library. The latter includes about 600 volumes. The public school at Canterbury is accommodated by a plain, substantial building located on Clinton Street.

There are several private schools maintained at Cornwall under thorough management. The influences thrown around pupils are of an elevated character. The fine scenery, the healthy atmosphere, the literary culture existing in the town, as well as the superior qualifications of the teachers, combine to render the place a desirable resort, to which pupils may be sent by parents who desire to know that only proper influences surround their children while away from home at school. Among these the Young Ladies' Institute may be specially named, Rev. Alfred C. Roe, principal.

REV. ALFRED COX ROE.—The branch of the Roe family represented by the subject of this sketch was early identified with the pioneer life of the country. The progenitor of the family in America was John

Alfred C. Roe

Roe, born in 1628, emigrated from Ireland in 1641, and who located first in Massachusetts, and subsequently on Long Island, at a place then called Setauket, now Port Jefferson, where several successive generations of the family have since resided. He died in 1711. Of himself and wife, Hannah Purrer, was born a son, Nathaniel, in 1670, who died in 1752. His wife was Hannah Reeve, born in 1678, died Aug. 16, 1759, and the children were Nathaniel, John, Elizabeth, Hannah, and Deborah. Nathaniel Roe (2) was born in the year 1700, and died in 1789. He married Elizabeth Phillips, born in 1702, died in 1788, and the issue of the union were Phillips, James, Nathaniel (3), William, Hannah, Elizabeth, Sarah, and Deborah.

James Roe, second son of Nathaniel (2), was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, and was born April 9, 1744. Early in life he took up his residence at Kingston, Ulster Co., where he married, on Oct. 19, 1770, Elizabeth Elting (born Jan. 8, 1745, died Sept. 28, 1793), and a representative of an old Huguenot family in Ulster, who, driven forth from France by the revocation of the edict of Nantes, sought the wilderness of America as an asylum where freedom of religious worship could be enjoyed. He served as a captain in the Revolutionary war. His house was burned by the British at the time of the burning of Kingston, during that struggle. His children, all of whom were born in Kingston, were James, Elizabeth, John Elting, Sylvester, Ann, William, Nathaniel (4), Rachel, and Peter. James Roe died Oct. 31, 1815, and was buried at Cornwall, where he settled soon after the close of the Revolutionary war.

Peter Roe, father of Rev. A. C. Roe, was born Sept. 14, 1789. He married Susan Williams, of New Windsor; and during the earlier part of his life engaged in the wholesale grocery business in New York City. He subsequently settled in New Windsor, where he engaged in agricultural and horticultural operations until his death on Aug. 13, 1877. He was a man of integrity and moral worth, devoted to the performance of secular and religious duty, and led an unostentatious and earnest life. An early anti-slavery man in his convictions and in his political action, he encountered many personal dangers growing out of the agitation of that period, while during the late Rebellion he maintained great personal courage on several important occasions. His wife was a lady of many excellent qualities, possessed of a wonderful memory, and a devoted wife and mother. She was a thorough historical and biblical scholar, and, it is said, could repeat the New Testament and Milton's Paradise Lost word for word. The children of Peter and Susan (Williams) Roe, were eight in number, namely,—Oswald William, who died young; Alfred Cox; James Gilbert; Susan Elizabeth; John Peter; William Wilberforce; Edward Payson; and Mary Abigail.

Alfred C. Roe was born in New York City, on April 7, 1823. In 1824 his father, Peter Roe, removed to Moodna, Orange Co., then known as Murderer's Creek, from the tradition of the death of the Stacey family in the early Indian history of the country, related by Paulding, and afterwards celebrated in verse by Bishop A. C. Coxe.

The earlier educational training of Mr. Roe was received from a governess employed in the family, and from 1835 to 1840 he was fitted for college by Rev. Jonathan Silliman, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Canterbury, Orange Co. He entered the sophomore class of the New York University in the latter year, and after a successful collegiate career was graduated with the third honor of his class, being especially proficient in Greek, mathematics, and the natural sciences. Among his classmates were Rev. William P. Breed, D.D., William Allen Butler, and Aaron J. Vanderpoel. On leaving college Mr. Roe taught for one season in the school of Rev. Alfred Chester, of Morristown, N. J., and in the fall of 1844 opened a school for ladies and gentlemen in the village of Canterbury, now Cornwall, Orange Co., some of those whom he had then under instruction subsequently becoming well-known officers in the war of the Rebellion, among them being Col. Ulric Dahlgren, Col. William Silliman, and Maj. James Cromwell, of Orange County, all of whom lost their lives in the war.

In the spring of 1853, Mr. Roe purchased the Fowler Griggs property, now owned by Mrs. Carswell, and removed to Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, where he opened a school for boys, at first general in its scope, but which was gradually changed to mathematical and engineering studies, and enjoyed great popularity. In the fall of 1863 he entered the gospel ministry, and was ordained by the Presbytery of North River. He soon after closed his school and, animated by a desire to be of service in the war then being prosecuted against the South, entered the army as chaplain, being connected first with the Eighty-third New York Volunteers (the old Ninth New York State Militia), and subsequently with the One Hundred and Fourth New York Volunteers. He joined his first regiment at Cedar Mountain, and participated actively in the great revival movements of the Army of the Potomac, especially at Culpepper. He was in the field-hospitals or with the troops during the campaign of the Wilderness, and until the army settled down before Petersburg. He was then in the neighborhood of Forts Sedgwick and Warren until the taking of the Weldon Railroad. The day following the regiment to which he belonged was annihilated or captured in the attempt of the Confederates to retake the position, the chaplain escaping the general disaster on account of his absence in expressing money home for the soldiers. Even then he would have returned in time to his regiment had he not been urged by one of the general officers on his route homeward to stop and take dinner with him. After the destruction of his regiment, Chaplain Roe was appointed to staff service with the Third Division, Fifth Corps, Maj.-Gen. Crawford commanding, until the close of the war. While attached to this corps he was present at the battle of Hatcher's Run, at Warren's raid to Weldon, at the battle of Five Forks, and at the surrender at Appomattox, oftentimes performing hazardous and trying service.

At the close of the war Mr. Roe located in New York, where he entered upon city mission-work in the service of the New York City Mission and Tract Society, working chiefly in the Fifteenth Ward, in the neighborhood of Houston and Bleecker Streets, among the fallen and the saloons of gilded vice, and in connection with the "Home for the Fallen." In December, 1867, he accepted the position of secretary of the American Christian Commission, and was occupied in arranging Christian conventions and in disseminating information on practical Christian labor. The Christian at Work was started in Mr. Roe's office, largely by his help and influence, and was edited by him for several months.

In the spring of 1870, Mr. Roe entered into the distinctive work of the ministry, and labored until May of the following year among the factory operatives at Lowell, Mass., in many respects a wide and promising field. In June, 1871, he accepted a call to the Second Presbyterian Church of Geneva, N. Y., where he labored for two years, and then removed to Clyde, Wayne Co., N. Y., where he remained until May, 1877, when, finding the climate injurious to his family, he returned to Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, and opened in the fall of that year a school for young ladies, occupying for one year his former location, and then removing to his present picturesque and healthful residence. Here Mr. Roe has since continued, bringing to his duties a wide experience in educational work, and laboring to confer upon the young ladies committed to his charge a superior education, and to fit them for the intelligent performance of the duties of life. The course of study pursued is high, following the Harvard standard for ladies as a guide, and the object in view is to educate the pupils as thoroughly as they would be at any collegiate institution, while due regard is paid to the health and strength of each, so that girls of delicate constitution can study as they are able without the pressure of the routine of a college or large institution. The plan has proven justly popular, and the school is well patronized by the public, the pupils enjoying meantime the influences of a harmonious and well-regulated Christian home, as well as a climate celebrated for its general healthfulness.

Mr. Roe was married on March 23, 1847, to Caroline P., daughter of Judge Francis Child, of Morristown, N. J., who died in 1859, leaving two children, viz.: Frank C., at present in the employ of the New York Elevated Railroad Company, and Caroline P. Roe. To his present wife, née Emma, daughter of Rev. J. D. Wickham, D.D., of Manchester, Vt., he was united on Oct. 24, 1860. The children of this union are Elizabeth Merwin, Mary Wickham, and Joseph Wickham Roe.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF BETH-LEHEM

was incorporated by a certificate filed April 30, 1785. The trustees named in the instrument were Wm. Denniston, James Kernaghan, Samuel Moffatt, Jr., James Clinton, George Denniston, Samuel Ketcham, Wm. Moffatt, Joseph Chandler. The paper was signed by Wm. Denniston and Joseph Chandler, two of the elders of the church. This was the legal organization, under the laws of the State, of a church which had already existed for many years under colonial authority.

The congregation embraces a part of three towns,—Cornwall, New Windsor, and Blooming-Grove. The church edifice stands within the bounds of the first named. It is the third oldest Presbyterian congregation organized north of the Highlands and west of the Hudson River. (See General History.)

For a considerable time they did not enjoy the advantages of a stated ministry, but were dependent upon such occasional services as they could obtain. The name of the first minister who resided and labored constantly among them was Chalker. His successor was the Rev. Enos Ayres, whose name is found in the catalogue of the first class graduated from the College of New Jersey, then at Newark, but since removed to Princeton. Mr. Ayres continued his ministry down to the year 1764. He was succeeded by a gentleman from Scotland, Rev. Francis Peppard, but whether immediately or after an interval we are not informed. During his ministry the congregation of New Windsor came into existence, and was associated with Bethlehem, Mr. Peppard supplying both pulpits. Mr. Peppard's ministry ended in 1773. The next stated preacher was the Rev. John Close. His ministry continued fourteen years, embracing the Revolutionary war. After Mr. Close had retired the pulpit was occupied by Rev. Mr. Freeman, a learned and eloquent man, who removed from here to the State of New Jersey. He was succeeded by Rev. Joel T. Benedict. Mr. Benedict was a man of ardent piety, untiring zeal, and an eloquence which drew crowds to listen to his preaching. Rev. Henry Ford, a man of estimable character, followed Mr. Benedict, and was in turn followed by Rev. Artemas Dean, who commenced his ministry in December, 1813, and continued it until April, 1842. During Mr. Dean's pastorate the old church, after standing nearly a century, was replaced by another edifice in 1828.

Mr. Dean was succeeded by Rev. J. B. Hubbard, who occupied the pulpit until April, 1846. Mr. Hubbard was succeeded by the Rev. John N. Lewis, who remained until July, 1853. He was followed by Rev. Robert H. Beattie in September, 1854. Dr. Beattie was pastor until May, 1866. Rev. Wm. A. Holliday was his successor, and remained until 1872.

The present pastor, Rev. David J. Atwater, officiated as a supply for some months, when a call tendered him by the church was accepted, and he was installed

May 1, 1873. In 1872 the church edifice was reseated and otherwise considerably improved at an expense of about $1300.

The old burial-ground belonging to the church is a place of early sacred associations. There "the forefathers of the hamlet sleep." The place was enlarged in 1868 by the purchase of four acres, which were appropriately divided into lots.

FRIENDS' MEETING, CORNWALL (HICKSITE).

The Friends of early times in this town met for worship at the house of David Sands (the Robert E. Ring place of modern times). Mr. Sands was a noted preacher of this denomination, and was very prominent in the public affairs of the town. In 1798 he visited England and Ireland, during the rebellion of the latter country, and passed unmolested from the camp of the Royalists to that of the insurgents, boldly preaching the doctrine of peace.

The meeting-house south of Canterbury village was erected about 1790, and the property, then of several acres in extent, was deeded in 1789 by Langford Thorn to Joseph Thorn, Nicholas Townsend, and William Titus, in trust for the Cornwall Monthly Meeting. The frame of the original building remains, but is no longer the time-worn, venerable meeting-house known to several generations. It has recently been thoroughly repaired, newly sided, roofed, and painted, and the grounds around it improved. It is now a neat, handsome edifice, yet of that plain, unpretending order characteristic of the Friends. It is said that in the erection of the original building of 1790, Catharine Sands brought the nails on horseback with which the house was put together. These nails were of wrought iron, and were made at the smithy in New Windsor. She was at that time about twelve years of age. Six years later she was married to Elias Ring, being the first marriage celebrated in the new meeting-house. In the division that occurred in the denomination throughout the country, about the year 1827, the Hicksite portion of the Cornwall Friends held the old property.

The following particulars are furnished by Joshua T. Cromwell:

There was a meeting held at Cornwall before the Monthly Meeting was established.

Cornwall Monthly Meeting was established 11th mo. 21, 1788. The first clerk was John Dean; the second, William Titus, appointed 7th mo., 1792; the third, Amos Mills, appointed 11th mo., 1793.

The ministers named in the record are Gardner Earle and David Sands.

The first marriage was of Elias Ring and Catharine Sands, 5th mo., 1790; the second, Henry Reynolds and Rhoda Cock, 2d mo., 1790; the third, Reuben Wright and Philadelphia Hawkshurst, 3d mo., 1791; the fourth, Jacob Cock and Hannah Townsend, 4th mo., 1792.

"4th mo., 1789, paid for sufferings on account of our testimony against war, £35, and nearly clear of traffic in spirituous liquors; none distilled.

"4th mo., 1790, £17 17s. 6d.; no negroes as slaves.

"4th mo., 1791, £12 2s.; clear of dealing in spirituous liquors."

The deed for the property at Cornwall was made by Langford Thorn and Mary, his wife, to Joseph Thorn, Nicholas Townsend, and William Titus, duly elected and appointed by the Society of Friends at a meeting in Cornwall to purchase and take title for and in behalf of said society; is dated 7th mo. 9, 1789; consideration, £25 12s. 6d. It is a full warranty deed, and conveys ten and a quarter acres and twenty-five rods of land, including four acres called the meeting-house lot. Joseph Thorn, John Young, and Charles Webb were appointed a committee to settle with the trustees for building the meeting-house.

4th mo., 1819, John Green, Noah Townsend, Richard Trimble, and Henry Titus were appointed to repair the meeting-house. The expense was $1300. David Cromwell was one of the carpenters. The present cost of repairing (1880) was about $1000.

Present clerks of Preparative Meeting, Charles E. Cock and Mary Brown; of Monthly Meeting, James Seaman and Elizabeth Seaman; of Quarterly Meeting, Joshua T. Cromwell; Overseers, J. Quimby Brown and Charles E. Cock; Elders, John Cromwell, Jacob Seaman, Chas. E. Cock, Phebe Cock, Hannah Seaman, Elizabeth Cromwell, and Martha Seaman.

Names of Friends that belonged to the first meetings and served on committees, etc., and had removal certificates from Long Island and other places to Cornwall, are as follows:

Names received: David Sands, Nicholas Townsend, Langford Thorn, Joseph Shove, Job Wright, Jedediah Allen, John Dean, William Titus, Jacob Brown, Gardiner Earle, Gideon Mulliner,* John Young, Edward Hallock,* William Bloomer,* William Knowles, Joshua Sutton, Patrick Cashada, Moses Clark, Nehemiah Smith, Charles Webb (afterwards a minister).

Under date of 3d mo. 23d, the names of Jacob Cock, Benjamin Pell, Job Davis, and Reuben Wright appear in the records.

25th of 5th mo., 1789, William Titus was appointed treasurer; Joseph Thorn, Joshua Sutton, Nicholas Townsend, and Job Wright committee to look after the poor. 6th mo., 1789, Elias Ring received by certificate from Concord, Pa. 12th mo., 1789, school committee, Nicholas Townsend, John Young, Gardiner Earle, William Titus, and Job Wright. 3d mo., 1792, raised for the relief of the poor 5 pounds 19 shillings. 6th mo., 1794, Samuel Seaman received by certificate, and his wife, Keziah, and children,—Thomas, Martha, Silas, Rachel, and John. Women Friends named in early records were Phebe Earle, clerk; Abigail Fowler, Phebe Young, Phebe Dean were the first committee in care of Valley meeting; Clement Sands, Hannah Smith, Phebe Earle, and Abigail Fowler were the representatives to first Quarterly Meeting.

Hannah Smith, Catherine Palmer, Elizabeth Cock, and Mary Pell were a committee to attend the meeting at Gideon Mulliner's house. At this time Clement Sands and Mary Titus were overseers. The second committee to attend meeting at Gideon Mulliner's house were Abigail Fowler, Hannah Smith, Philadelphia Townsend, Mary Carpenter, Phebe Young, Letitia Clark, Rhoda Cock.

4th month, 1789, representatives to Quarterly Meeting were Hannah Smith, Deborah Brown, Rhoda Cock, Letitia Clark, and Philena Hallock. Other names mentioned in those early years were Phebe McCann, Martha Sutton, Anna Tripp, Catherine Palmer, Sarah Hallock, Rhoda Howell, Mary Wright, Martha Thorn.

THE FIRST BAPTIST CONGREGATION AT NEW CORNWALL

met for legal organization at the house of Samuel Raymond, Nov. 17, 1794. The certificate was signed by Samuel Raymond and Henry Mandeville, deacons, and the trustees named therein were Jacob Mandeville, Obadiah Smith, Andrew Sutherland, Jr., Joseph Smith, and James Sutherland.

The first record we have of a Baptist organization in the town of Cornwall is that of Nov. 17, 1794. The certificate filed in the county clerk's office was signed by Samuel Raymond and Henry Mandeville, deacons, and the trustees named therein were Jacob Mandeville, Obadiah Smith, Andrew Sutherland, Jr., Joseph Smith, and James Sutherland. This organization was never recognized as a regular Baptist church, and was of short duration, and it was not till April 9, 1822, that another organization was effected. Then a few Baptists met at the house of William Atkinson and effected another organization; Benjamin Atkinson and Samuel Brooks were appointed inspectors of the election; Samuel Gregg, William Atkinson, Joseph Brooks, Benjamin Atkinson, James Brooks, John Denniston, and Daniel Tobias were elected trustees. This organization continued until Oct. 16, 1823, when it was duly recognized as a regular Baptist Church by a council of sister churches. Rev. Aaron Perkins was chosen moderator of the council, and Nathaniel S. Davis clerk. The following persons composed the membership of the church: Brethren, Samuel Brooks, William Atkinson, Samuel Gregg, and Benjamin Wright; and sisters, Ann Brooks, Elizabeth Brooks, and Mary Gregg.

The recognition sermon was preached by Rev. A. Perkins, and the hand of fellowship was given by Rev. C. Mais. The first deacons chosen by this church were Samuel Gregg and Samuel Brooks. At an adjourned meeting Robert Young was elected sexton, Samuel Brooks treasurer, and Samuel Gregg and Benjamin Atkinson the leaders of the singing. Rev. C. Mais was the first pastor, but nothing is said of his pastorate. June 2, 1825, Rev. Thomas Powell was called as pastor. Succeeding pastorates were as follows:

Rev. D. T. Hill, May 20, 1827, to May, 1829; Rev. A. C. Sangster, from Aug. 4, 1832; Rev. J. Well-slager, April 3, 1838, to April 1, 1840; Rev. James W. Jones, May 28, 1840, to Sept. 29, 1841; Rev. G. Webster, June 1, 1843, to May 1, 1844; Rev. C. Raymond, May 19, 1844, to May 19, 1845; Rev. J. S. Bailey, June 1, 1845, to January, 1848; Rev. William Wilkins, Oct. 14, 1848, to March 1, 1850; Rev. E. P. Weed, February, 1860, to Jan. 1, 1865; Rev. B. F. Bowen, Nov. 1, 1865, to Aug. 1, 1866; Rev. E. B. Palmer, Sept. 1, 1866, to April 1, 1869; Rev. James Goodman, Sept. 4, 1870, to Sept. 1, 1873; Rev. Isaac Wescott, D.D., Jan. 1, 1874, to Oct. 1, 1877; Rev. D. T. Hill, March 1, 1877, to April 1, 1878; Rev. J. E. Bell, March 16, 1879, to Sept. 1, 1879; Rev. M. L. Ferris, the present pastor, settled May 1, 1880. The church now numbers 90 members. The present officers are Rev. M. L. Ferris, pastor; George Brooks and Gilbert Tompkins, deacons; George Brooks, treasurer; and John H. Atkinson, clerk. The trustees are William Atkinson, Benjamin Wright, John H. Atkinson, Gilbert Tompkins, George Brooks, and James M. Davis.

The first meeting-house was built in 1822-23, near what is now Orr's Mills. The present house of worship was built in 1849. The church was originally called the Zion Baptist Church, but in 1849 the name was changed to "The Baptist Church of Cornwall," and the certificate was duly filed in the county clerk's office.

The early records of the church are very imperfect, thus preventing a more minute sketch, especially in reference to the length of pastoral settlements.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN SOCIETY OF CANTERBURY

made a legal organization Nov. 2, 1824. The proceedings were signed by Samuel Cruver, chairman, and Thomas S. Fish, secretary. The meeting was held at the school-house, and the trustees chosen were Peter Roe, Thomas F. Fish, Daniel Cruver, Stephen Crissey, Lewis Barrett, Isaac Van Duzer, Nathan Westcott, Samuel W. Heard, Samuel Townsend. At the same meeting it was resolved to build a church in or near the village of Canterbury. This was the legal organization of a society nearly four years before the formation of the church, as the latter is given in "Beach's History of Cornwall" as July 1, 1827.

In pursuance of the vote mentioned in the certificate of incorporation a house of worship was erected within the next two or three years, as it is stated to have been completed for worship in 1827. The building then erected was remodeled and improved in 1841, and again in 1860. At this last date a new front of brick was added and a tower at an expense of $2000. The rear of the lot on which the church stands is used as a burial-place.

The organization of the church in 1827 was under the labors of Rev. James H. Thomas, and the members were mostly from other churches, having received letters of dismission from their former churches to enable them to constitute this new one. Mr. Thomas was installed Feb. 12, 1828, pastor of two churches—that of Canterbury and the one at New Windsor—by the North River Presbytery. This relation was dissolved by the action of the Wappinger Presbytery, with which this church had been subsequently united, April 29, 1834. The Rev. John B. Fish was then employed for about fifteen months. In the fall of 1835 the Rev. Jonathan Silliman was installed pastor by the Presbytery of North River, and remained in that position for the long period of twenty-six years. On the third Sabbath of July, 1861, he tendered his resignation, which was finally accepted, and the relation regularly terminated by the action of the Presbytery. Mr. Silliman, however, continued to supply the pulpit for several months longer. He also remained at Canterbury, and now (1880) may be seen every Sabbath sitting in a chair near to the pulpit from which he so long preached the gospel.

On April 1, 1862, Rev. Alvah Baker was employed as supply, and continued in the service of the church for two years. He was a licentiate of the Third Presbytery of New York. Rev. Clarence Eddy, a licentiate of Princeton Seminary, next occupied the pulpit as pastor, being installed in the spring of 1865, and continuing in that relation until Jan. 15, 1869. After something of an interval, in which the pulpit was temporarily supplied by various ministers, Rev. William E. Clarke was stately employed from Oct. 1, 1869, to April 1, 1872. Soon after an arrangement was made with Rev. Lyman Abbott, one of the editors of the Christian Union, and residing at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, to supply this pulpit. His labors are highly appreciated by the congregation. He does not, however, assume the full work of pastor, his services being limited by agreement to a morning discourse followed by Bible-class instruction. He is still acting under the arrangement referred to.

The present session consists of Rev. Jonathan Silliman, moderator, and William V. Dusenberry, N. R. Pierson, A. M. Hollett, Dr. J. T. Hotchkiss, elders. The board of trustees comprises N. R. Pierson, William Orr, Peter Millington, Oliver Brewster, and A. M. Hollett.

REV. JONATHAN SILLIMAN was born at Chester, Middlesex Co., Conn., on July 22, 1793. He was the son of Thomas Silliman, and grandson of Rev. Robert Silliman, for many years pastor of the Congregational Church at New Canaan, Conn. Rev. Robert Silliman was an uncle of Gen. G. S. Silliman. Tradition says that the family originated in Italy, the patronymic being Sillimundi.

Rev. Jonathan Silliman received his collegiate education at Yale, from which institution he was graduated in the class of 1817. He subsequently studied theology at Andover, Mass., and was graduated from the seminary at that place in 1821. During his theological course he taught for one year at Phillips Academy, Andover. After being regularly licensed to preach, Mr. Silliman entered upon the work of the gospel ministry in Virginia, first in the counties of New Kent and Charles City, and afterwards in King William's County, where he remained in the performance of missionary and evangelical work for a period of thirteen years. In 1835, in consequence of the severe climate of Virginia, he removed to the North, and became the pastor of the Canterbury Presbyterian Church, Cornwall, Orange Co., N. Y., continuing to labor in that field until the year 1862, when he ceased to be connected with the church as pastor, although he still resides at Canterbury.

Mr. Silliman was married on Sept. 5, 1832, to Anna, daughter of Rev. Amzi Armstrong, D.D., for twenty years pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Mendham, N. J., and subsequently principal for ten years of the academy at Bloomfield, N. J. The family is of Scotch-Irish descent, the grandfather of Rev. Mr. Armstrong having come from Enniskillen, Ireland, about the year 1727, and settled first on Long Island, and afterwards at Warwick, N. Y., where many of the descendants of the family still reside.

An only son of Mr. and Mrs. Silliman, William, of great professional promise in the law, lost his life in the late war. A sketch of his life appears in the military history of this work.

FRIENDS' MEETING, CORNWALL (ORTHODOX).

At the division in 1827 the Hicksite portion holding the old meeting-house and grounds, those who became known as Orthodox were under the necessity of seeking accommodations elsewhere. For a time they held their meetings at the house of Jabez Green, in Canterbury, in late years the place of Mrs. Purdy. From there they went to what is known as the Bell House, in Montana. After that they met for a time in the brick building near the Union Hotel in Canterbury. But all these places were only temporary places for their meeting. They needed a fixed and permanent abiding place, and accordingly in 1828 and 1829 they built the present brick meeting-house in Canterbury village, back from the principal street and in the rear of John Chatfield's. Here they have a large and convenient site that with a little grading and improvement might become a handsome property. It is said that the opening of this new meeting-house was characterized by an interesting coincidence with the opening of the first. In 1831 the marriage of Squire Ring was the first that occurred in the new house, as the marriage of his mother forty years before had been the first to occur in the old house.

Near this meeting-house is the private burial-place of the Ring and Sands families. The remains of David Sands, the early preacher, rest there at the present time, having been removed from the small and early burial-place near Mr. John Hancon's.

THE METHODIST CHURCH OF CORNWALL executed a certificate of incorporation at Cornwall in the usual "meeting-room," June 20, 1829. The proceedings were signed by John L. Dusenberry and Charles Hamilton, and the trustees chosen were George Marriott, Archer Clark, John L. Dusenberry, Henry W. Bartholf, Charles Hamilton, and Milton DuBois. This formal organization had been preceded by the well-known itinerant work of the Methodist Church. The first preaching was in private houses or in school-houses, as the early laborers went up and down among the mountains breaking to scattered

J. Silliman

Mr. Silliman has now attained the advanced age of eighty-eight years, but is still well preserved, and afflicted with but slight bodily ailments. He has lived a quiet and unostentatious life, and devoted himself entirely to faithful work in the Master's vineyard. He has been essentially a home-worker, considering it to be his highest duty to look after the interests of his own community first, and not identifying himself notably with the public movements of his church and of society. He has been recognized as a faithful and efficient pastor, devoted to his calling, and is held in the highest respect and esteem by his friends and neighbors.

neighborhoods the bread of life. The territory now embraced in this charge was formerly a part of the New Windsor Circuit. That included Vail's Gate, Salisbury, Chester, Monroe, Sugar-Loaf, Little Britain, Mountainville, and sundry other neighborhoods. Over this immense circuit the early ministers traveled, thus having a parish large enough to constitute the modern district of a presiding elder.

Rev. W. G. Browning, who prepared the sketch in the church book in 1877, from which these facts are chiefly obtained, states that some of the oldest members living, as Thomas Ostrander and Gilbert Barton, speak with enthusiasm of the early ministers and their self-denying labors; among whom are recalled the names of Revs. Daniel Ostrander, Eben Smith, John E. Robertson, Heman Bangs, Wm. Jewett, Marvin Richardson, Phineas Rice, Nathan Rice, Noah Bigelow, Benjamin Griffin, Seymour Landon, Jarvis Nichols; of one Lyons, who died of paralysis in his stable at Sugar-Loaf; of James K. Romer, David Holmes, William Bloomer, A. C. Fields, Jacob Washburn, John A. Selleck, David Turner, and many others.

The "meeting-room" where the organization of 1829 took place, and where meetings were subsequently held for several years, was at the landing near what is now known as the Corners. The building was used both as a school-house and a church.

Under date of Dec. 5, 1833, at a meeting duly notified, a society was formed called "The Methodist Episcopal Church of Canterbury," and the trustees chosen were William G. Beach, Gilbert C. Barton, Simon Haskins, Amos Van Duzer, Isaac Seaman, George Marriott, Benjamin Delamater, Henry W. Bertholf, and Robert Duncanson. This meeting was held at the school-house of district No. 4. Two organizations were thus constituted, and for many years two sets of trustees continued to be appointed, one set to be in charge of the "meeting-room" at Cornwall Landing, the other of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Canterbury, the result finally being one church having one house of worship. The erection of this took place from 1834 to 1836. The first committee on site was appointed Jan. 6, 1834, and consisted of George Marriott and Isaac Seaman. The site secured was the one now occupied by the church in Canterbury, and comprised one and three-quarters acres of land bought of Mrs. Catharine Ring, the deed bearing date April 17, 1834. Jesse Hunter, a member of the church, was the contractor, and it is said that considerable difficulty arose over the execution of the contract that was only terminated by a law-suit, which was decided in favor of Mr. Hunter after he had removed to Homer, Cortland Co.

The house of worship was completed and dedicated near the close of the year 1836. The double organization continued some years longer. The last trustees of "the meeting-room" seem to have been chosen Feb. 23, 1839, and consisted of Robert Duncanson and Isaac V. Machett. After that a public discussion arose over the proprietorship of the building at the landing, which was ended by the people maintaining their right to it as a school-building. After sundry changes of location and structure it became the public school building of modern times at "the Corners." From this time for several years, 1839 to 1852, the records are defective, and it would hardly appear that the annual elections of trustees took place.

That the legal incorporation had lapsed may be inferred from the fact that a new certificate was filed with the county clerk, executed Jan. 27, 1852. The trustees named in the instrument were John Quackenbush, Daniel Taft, Isaac V. Machett, Caleb L. Wood, and Daniel Secor. From this time the organization was kept up by annual elections. In 1862 the church edifice was thoroughly repaired, many improvements made, and refurnished throughout. The grading of the grounds and the erection of the wall in front took place at this time.

From the record of the county clerk's office it appears that a change of name took place soon after this general renewal of the edifice,—a fact of which Mr. Browning in his sketch does not seem to have known, as he argues in 1877 that it ought to be done. The new certificate was under the name of "The Methodist Episcopal Church of Cornwall," and was executed June 1, 1863. The paper was verified by the signatures of James Fanning and J. W. Lamb.

The trustees named therein were Jacob W. Lamb, Ira Wood, Stephen Barton, Jesse Lozier, and Henry C. Hall. Another general repairing of the church edifice took place in 1874, at a cost of about $5000. An extension of 24 feet was added to the building, the old galleries taken down, and a neat spire constructed. The church was reopened October 3d of the same year. The parsonage was built in 1863, and has been improved several times since. It is a pleasant and convenient residence. The present organization (September, 1880) consists of the following: Rev. Isaac B. Heroy, pastor; Ira Wood, H. R. Taylor, Hanford Barton, L. T. Schultz, Charles Tuthill, and H. C. Hall, stewards; Ira Wood and C. B. Hunter, class-leaders; Ira Wood, H. R. Taylor, H. Barton, A. C. Case, Harrison Howell, L. T. Schultz, John Preston, and H. C. Hall, trustees; Lewis T. Schultz, superintendent of Sunday-school. There are 173 communicants, and 350 volumes in the Sunday-school library.

THE CORNWALL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

effected a legal organization May 3, 1855. The Rev. Daniel Crane was chosen moderator, and Alfred C. Reeves, secretary. The trustees chosen were John McKibben, David Carson, Jr., James O. Adams, Peter Roe, Stephen C. Gillis, Henry N. Clark, Thomas M. Wiley, Daniel Crane, and James G. Roe. The present pastor of this church furnishes the following sketch: This enterprise was commenced in 1855 by a few persons who deeply felt the importance and the feasibility of establishing a church in this place. At first they held their meetings in the school-room of Mr. Alfred C. Roe. After a few months, however, they resolved to erect a house of worship, and on March 5, 1856, the present building was dedicated to the service of the Triune God. On the 16th of the same month the church was organized by a committee from the Presbytery of North River, and consisted of the following persons: Peter Roe, Mrs. Susan E. Roe, Thomas M. Wiley, Mrs. Sarah J. Wiley, Mrs. S. Elizabeth Caldwell, Alfred C. Roe, Mrs. Caroline P. Roe, James G. Roe, Mrs. Caroline M. Roe, Mrs. Mary A. Clark, Amanda Adams, Mrs. Mary J. Jackson, Angelina Clark, Mrs. Rachel Buren, Mrs. Phebe Griggs, John P. Roe, Mary Johnston.

The first elders chosen were Peter Roe, Thomas M. Wiley, and James G. Roe. Soon after, James O. Adams was elected an additional elder.

The first board of trustees were Rev. Daniel Crane, Stephen C. Gillis, Peter Roe, Thomas M. Wiley, John McKebben, David Carson, Jr., James O. Adams, Henry N. Clark, James G. Roe.

Rev. O. H. P. Deyo acted as stated supply from April, 1856, to April, 1857.

Rev. Louis P. Ledoux, D.D., began his ministry in this church in April, 1858; was installed pastor April 19, 1859, and remained in office till Sept. 20, 1865, when, at his own request, the relation was dissolved.

Rev. Joseph H. Robinson acted as stated supply from Dec. 1, 1865, to Oct. 25, 1866, when he was installed pastor. He died in office March 4, 1868.

Rev. John W. Teal acted as stated supply from June 1st to Sept. 17, 1868, when he was ordained and installed pastor. The relation was dissolved at his own request, April 30, 1878.

Rev. George P. Noble acted as stated supply from June 1st to October, 1878, when he was installed pastor.

The session was enlarged in April, 1870, by the election of Stephen B. Young, Harvey B. Adams, and Albert Palmer; and again in April, 1880, by the election of Wm. H. Vail, Leonard N. Wyant, and T. M. Prentiss to the eldership.

The church building will seat about 600, and the parsonage, situated upon Park Avenue, Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, is roomy and convenient.

The church has received 329 new members upon confession of their faith, and 117 by certificate from other churches. On June 1, 1880, the enrolled membership was 310, of whom 279 were resident.

During the last five years the church has raised $15,772 for home expenses and $2812 for outside benevolence.

The present organization is as follows: Pastor, Rev. George P. Noble; Session, James O. Adams, Thomas M. Wiley, Jas. G. Roe, H. B. Adams, S. B. Young, A. Palmer, W. H. Vail, L. N. Wyant, T. M. Prentiss; Trustees, J. O. Adams, James Couser, S. B. Young, J. G. Roe, H. B. Adams, A. Palmer, H. Rodermond, T. M. Prentiss, W. H. Vail, Henry Hunter, Theodore Brown. Sabbath-school: Superintendent, J. G. Roe; Secretary and Treasurer, Geo. M. Walker; Librarians, Geo. W. Roome, Jr., and Reeve Ketcham. Ladies' Missionary Society: President, Mrs. E. T. Noble; Vice-President, Mrs. E. W. Roe; Recording Secretary, Mrs. C. H. Vail; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Maria Couser; Treasurer, Miss Clara Taft. Alaska Brady Club: President, N. B. Chase; Vice-Presidents, Wm. H. Carswell, Wm. M. Wyant; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Lilly Roe; Recording Secretary, Miss Lilly Price; Treasurer, Reeve Ketcham.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF MOUNTAINVILLE.

The house of worship belonging to this church stands upon an elevated ridge in the southwest part of the town near Mountainville, and about four miles from Canterbury. It belonged to the same charge with that of Canterbury for many years, but under the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Browning this connection was dissolved, Cornwall becoming a station, and Mountainville being united with the church at Vail's Gate. The old meeting-house at this place may still be seen at the right of the road. It was built by the liberality of Mr. Henry Wisner, in 1844. The land was donated by Jacob Van Duzer. In 1866-67 a site of about an acre was secured on a more commanding elevation, and the present building erected at a cost of about $5000. It was dedicated March 20, 1867. The work of the Methodist Church in this vicinity and in the northern part of Monroe has been prosecuted with considerable vigor for many years. In early movements at Woodbury and Highland Mills the same men seem to have shared largely, and in organizing boards of trustees the same names appear in different certificates. Mountainville is the more modern name of this village. The place was formerly called Ketchamtown, from the family of that name. A portion of the village, or rather a separate group of residences, farther southeast on the old turnpike, was called Highlandville.

The present church was incorporated under the name of "The Methodist Episcopal Church of Highlandville," by a certificate drawn up at a meeting held in the school-house, March 12, 1845. The proceedings were signed by John Barton and William Taylor, and the trustees chosen were Henry Wisner, Gilbert Barton, William Taylor, Daniel Secor, and John Barton. The present pastor of the church is Rev. N. S. Tuthill, residing at Vail's Gate.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH OF CANTERBURY (EPISCOPAL) was incorporated July 17, 1858. The certificate was signed by Rev. Christopher B. Wyatt, F. A. Barton, and W. H. Bayard. The wardens chosen were Alonzo A. Alvord and William H. Bayard; the vestrymen were Thomas P. Cummings, Nathaniel P.

Willis, Daniel C. Birdsall, James W. Crissey, Nicholas Chatfield, Jr., Francis A. Barton, Charles H. Mead, and John Chatfield. On the 31st of the same month the Rev. Mr. Wyatt, under whose labors the movement for organization had been made, was chosen rector of the parish, and at the same meeting a committee was chosen to secure a site for an edifice. In November following the lot upon which the church now stands was purchased, and means adopted to raise the funds necessary to build. The plans submitted by Mr. J. W. Priest, the architect, were adopted. The corner-stone was laid May 10, 1859, by the Right Rev. Dr. Potter, and a contract was subsequently made with Messrs. Shaw & Sons, of Newburgh, for the erection of the building, with the exception of the tower and the spire. Before the edifice was begun the talented young architect who designed the building had already ceased from his labors on earth.

The west window of the church was contributed by admiring friends as a memorial of him. The building was first used for divine service on Sunday, Nov. 20, 1859. It is a very chaste example of the early English style, substantially built of brick with stone trimmings, strictly correct both in proportion and details, and capable of being rendered truly beautiful by a judicious and not costly employment of color decoration. A melodeon was given by Mr. N. P. Willis. The first service books, communion vessels, etc., were also the gifts of different individuals. In the spring of 1862 the Rev. Mr. Wyatt resigned the pastorship, and was succeeded by the Rev. Edward H. Crissey. The same year a legacy of $2000 was received from the executors of the late Abraham B. Sands, the interest of which is forever to be appropriated to the rector of the parish.

In Easter, 1863, the labors of Rev. Dr. Crissey terminated, and he was followed in July by the Rev. George Seabury. Hitherto the parish had been united with that of New Windsor in support of the same pastor. It was now determined to make the Canterbury Church independent and self-sustaining, thus securing the entire services of the pastor. The Rev. Mr. Seabury's connection with this church was dissolved May 1, 1864. In the November following Rev. John G. Webster took charge of the parish, but remained only one year. He was succeeded Jan. 21, 1866, by the Rev. William G. French.

In July, 1869, some funds having accumulated, it was resolved to proceed with the completion of the edifice by erecting the tower and spire. Both were completed the following summer. In June, 1871, the Rev. Mr. French resigned his position, and the following February Rev. David H. McCurdy was called to the rectorship, and began his ministrations on Easter day. His administration of the affairs of the parish was eminently judicious and successful. During the year 1872 a debt of $3613.17 was entirely liquidated. Of this amount $2500 was generously given by the senior warden, Thomas P. Cummings, of New York, whose active interest early and late for the welfare of the parish entitles him to the lasting gratitude of this congregation. The church was largely intended for the accommodation of summer visitors. Resident Episcopalians have at times been few in number, and only moderately blessed with worldly wealth. The labors of Mr. McCurdy continued until Sept. 30, 1873.

The next summer Rev. Mr. McCurdy again supplied the pulpit for a few months. Rev. John Potter was chosen rector in the fall of that year, and commenced his work in the parish October 1st. He remained three years, concluding his work here Oct. 1, 1877.

The next pastor was Rev. B. S. Huntington, who commenced his services Nov. 12, 1877. He died suddenly of pneumonia, while on a visit to Bridgeport, Conn., April 1, 1880. Rev. W. E. Snowden became his successor, being chosen rector, and entering upon his duties May 1, 1880.

The church has had strong friends and has received liberal gifts. Mr. Thomas Cummings, of New York, whose assistance in paying the debt was noticed above, also presented the church at Christmas, 1877, with a bell of excellent tone, weighing about 1300 pounds. It was accompanied by a letter of such interest that we give it in full:

"No. 241 CLERMONT AVENUE, BROOKLYN.

"REV. S. B. HUNTINGTON, Rector of St. John's Church, Canterbury, N. Y.

"Rev. and Dear Sir, You will please communicate to the vestry of St. John's Church that it affords Mrs. Cummings and myself, as well as the other members of our family, much gratification to be enabled to place in the tower of St. John's a memorial to our dear departed children, Julia Bayard Cummings, who was taken from us Nov. 2, 1876, and Thomas Picton Cummings, who joined his sister, we trust, in the realms above on the 24th of October last. Trusting that the lines cast on the bell (copied from an old one in the tower of a church in Cornwall, England),

"Jesus, fulfill with thy good grace,
All that we becket to this place,"

may be truly verified, and that the little church so dear to us all, and which was an object of particular interest to the departed from early associations, may be a comfort and a blessing to many through the instrumentalities of the prayers said, the praises sung, and the blessed gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ preached therein,

"I remain affectionately yours,

"THOMAS P. CUMMINGS."

The melodeon presented by Mr. N. P. Willis is still in use for the Sunday-school, and is cherished as a memorial of the poet, and of his association with the founders of this church. A cabinet organ has since been purchased for the use of the choir. Another valuable donation to the church remains to be mentioned. In August, 1877, Miss Elizabeth C. Purdy deeded to the church as a free gift the residence and grounds on Main Street, formerly the homestead of her mother, Mrs. H. C. Purdy, as a rectory for the use of the pastors of St. John's Church. Another recent donation is that of kneeling-benches for all the pews of the church. The vestry have also been able to purchase a handsome addition to the grounds of the church, 50 feet by 75, and 250 feet in depth.

The present parish organization (September, 1880) consists of Rev. William E. Snowden, rector; Thomas

P. Cummings, of New York, senior warden; William J. Sherwood, junior warden; John Chatfield, Peter P. Hazen, James Emslie, Jr., John B. Raymond, Dr. Cornelius Walke, H. B. Breed, M. Webster, N. Chatfield, Jr., vestrymen; Peter P. Hazen, clerk and treasurer.

THE CHURCH OF ST. THOMAS (CATHOLIC), CORNWALL, was incorporated Nov. 17, 1870. The trustees who executed the certificate were Rev. John McCloskey, archbishop; Rev. William Starr, vicar-general; Rev. John A. Keogh, pastor, and two laymen, James Sheridan and Patrick Piggott. This was the legal organization of a society founded by the indefatigable labors of Rev. Father Keogh. He was appointed to the Cornwall mission by the archbishop of New York. Very much of an invalid and with apparently only a short lease of life before him, he nevertheless brought to his work a diligence and faithfulness that won friends not only among Catholics, but throughout the community among all denominations. Under the pure air and invigorating climate of Cornwall he recovered his health.

For some years before this Catholic services had been maintained in a small brick church opposite the entrance to Mr. Ryckman's property, which was built about 1860, under the direction of Rev. Edward J. O'Reilly, subsequently pastor of St. Mary's, New York City. Father Keogh resolved on a better edifice, and set to work immediately for that object. The ground was secured, and the excavations made by voluntary labor in the winter of 1870-71.

The corner-stone was laid in the spring by the bishop of Rochester, Rt. Rev. Dr. McQuade, assisted by several prominent priests from New York and elsewhere, and in the presence of a large concourse of citizens. The work was pushed with great energy, so that both the church and the pastoral residence were inclosed before fall. In the spring of 1872 the old church and property were disposed of, and in the month of June the altar was moved to the basement of the new church, which was fitted up as a chapel, with the ample dimensions of 100 by 50. The church and rectory, as thus completed, cost not far from $30,000, of which about $13,000 remained as a debt.

At the completion of the large and convenient chapel work was suspended; and the "hard times" following immediately, it has not been resumed. Rev. Father Keogh retired from this charge April 1, 1876. He was immediately succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. Stephen Mackin. The efforts of the latter have been wisely directed to strengthening and consolidating the society, without incurring additional debt; resolved to hold fast to what has been achieved, and await better financial times, when the large and beautiful edifice, designed and partially built, may be completed. Like many other pastors, Father Mackin has found it his highest duty to "hold the fort," strengthen the things that remain, and care for the spiritual wants of his parish. The interest has been regularly met, and the current expenses provided for.

The assistant pastor is Rev. James F. Kiely. The lay members of the board of trustees as provided by law are Dennis Halloran and John Callahan. There are about 110 families in the congregation, numbering about 550 persons, and communicants about 500.

The church building is situated on a pleasant site, central for the group of villages surrounding it, and having a fine view within range of the tower when it shall be completed.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

These are quite numerous, and can only be briefly catalogued. In the village of Canterbury may be noted the remnants of an early ground in the rear of Mr. Hollett's lot, on the opposite side of the road from the Presbyterian church. It originally extended into that street. It is now inclosed in private grounds, and neither names nor dates can be conveniently read, if any such remain.

In the rear of the Presbyterian church is a large level plat, a portion of which appears to date back fifty or sixty years, having also a few graves marked only by common field-stone indicating a still older period. Other parts of the ground are devoted to modern burial, with some attempts at lots regularly laid out. The whole needs additional care.

Burials are said to have taken place in a field on the north side of the creek in the village of Canterbury, now wholly plowed over and lost.

Near the Friends' meeting-house west of Canterbury is a cemetery of considerable extent. Doubtless many of the early settlers are buried there, as very many graves are marked with field-stone of an early day. There are also the short head-stones of a later period, upon which names and dates are sunk in some cases out of sight. Other portions of the ground are receiving considerable care according to modern ideas.

Near the Orthodox Friends' meeting-house in the village of Canterbury is the private burial-place of the Ring and Sands families. This is a rural, secluded spot, inclosed with a substantial iron fence.

The Catholic Church have a new cemetery laid out, and already some monuments are erected, and the whole, under careful attention, will doubtless become a handsome resting-place of the dead.

Near the station west of Orr's Mills is a burial-place, finely situated on rising ground, formerly the site of the Baptist church. It is evidently receiving considerable care at the present time.

Burials from the northern portion of Cornwall are now to a considerable extent either in the old or the new cemeteries in New Windsor.

The old Bethlehem burial-place is one of marked interest, connected as it is to one of the oldest churches in the county, and the graveyard the place of very early burial.

IX.—SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, INCORPORATIONS, Etc.

MASONIC.

In the year 1815 several Masons then residing in Cornwall met in Canterbury and made preliminary arrangements to establish a lodge. Upon their petition the Grand Lodge, under date of Sept. 9, 1815, issued a warrant authorizing the formation of Jerusalem Temple Lodge, No. 247, and appointing Wyatt Carr, Master, Abraham Mead, Senior Warden, and Sutherland Moore, Junior Warden. James B. Reynolds, of Hiram Lodge, Newburgh, was appointed to institute the new lodge. It is stated in the old record that the "said James B. Reynolds met the said lodge in the house of Ebenezer Crissey on the 5th day of October, 1815, and then and there installed the lodge agreeable to the customs thereof. The lodge then adjourned to the house of Brother Hugh Gregg and partook of a dinner prepared by him."

At the regular election, December 23d of that year, the following officers were chosen: Wyatt Carr, W. M.; Abraham Mead, S. W.; Sutherland Moore, J. W.; Nathaniel Clark, Treas.; Samuel H. Purdy, Sec.; William Williams, S. D.; Stephen Coleman, J. D.; Obadiah Smith, Jr., Sr. M. C.; Isaac B. Titus, Jr., M. C.; Lewis Batterson and John Arnold, Stewards; Hugh Gregg, Tyler.

Wyatt Carr continued Master until Dec. 23, 1820, when Wm. A. Clark was elected to succeed him. Mr. Clark was followed by Jonathan Morrill. In December, 1824, Oliver Farrington was elected Master, and occupied the chair until the suspension of the lodge in 1826. During this period of eleven years 92 candidates were initiated, of whom the first was Samuel H. Purdy. The lodge met in the attic of the present Moore's Hotel, of Canterbury. When the lodge surrendered its charter, the paraphernalia were taken in charge by Mr. Lane, then proprietor of that hotel, and after his death they were preserved by Mr. Dyer Brewster. They were given to the reorganized lodge of 1871, and are now in the lodge-room, cherished as objects of antiquity, rare memorials of early Masonry. The Bible was printed in 1799, and is a massive volume 15 by 18 inches. There is a dark lantern formed of tin and wood, with several mystical openings. There is also a Masonic mirror, and a symbolic chart printed in 1819.

The reorganization after forty-five years was an occasion of much interest. The installation took place July 27, 1872, and all the ceremonies were in ample form. Music was furnished by the West Point Band, and an oration was delivered by Rev. Charles Shelling, of Newburgh.

TEMPERANCE.

The first temperance organization was effected in 1841 or '42. It was continued for only a few years, but did much to develop and strengthen public sentiment in favor of sobriety. Among the active members of that period may be properly mentioned Fowler Griggs and George G. Clark. Various other temperance organizations had a brief existence from time to time, and carried forward the general work.

In 1866, Cornwall Division, No. 204, S. of T., was established. Among its founders were Samuel E. Shutes, afterwards mayor of Newburgh; James G. Roe, Rev. M. Messeter, D. A. Stephens, Thomas Taft, Jonas G. Davis, Joseph Ferguson, Henry R. Hunter, Harvey R. Taylor, and Charles H. Ray. Active in its formation were also several ladies, Mrs. Shutes, the Misses Cousers, Jackson, Ray, and Wiley. David A. Stephens was the first presiding officer, and he was followed by Samuel E. Shutes. Thomas Taft succeeded the latter. About 250 members were enrolled during the five years of its existence. This society was succeeded in 1870 by a lodge of Good Templars under the name of Idlewild Lodge, No. 860, I. O. of G. T. The present officers of the lodge (September, 1880) are Ezra P. Thompson, W. C. T.; Mrs. E. Cahey, W. V. T.; George Stevenson, Sec.; S. W. Cahey, Fin. Sec.; George W. Cahey, Treas.; William Graham, Marshal; B. F. Oliver, P. W. C. T.; George H. Dobbs, Lodge Deputy; Miss Libbie Oliver, Guard. The lodge meets every Tuesday night in the Salmon Building, on the dock.

In connection with this temperance work a fine building was erected in 1872, known as Temperance Hall. It was established by the Idlewild Temperance Association, at a total cost of about $6000. It is a frame building 30 by 55, and surmounted by a cupola. The hall proper is a handsome room 20 by 40, and 14 feet in height, the walls wainscoted, and the room properly furnished. Various temperance societies meet in this building, also the Odd-Fellows' lodge and religious meetings. Part of the building is occupied as a dwelling, and the ground-floor is divided into three stores, the rent from which makes the institution self-supporting. The building association was duly incorporated, and stock issued to the amount of about $10,000. The first officers were William H. Clark, president; George Stevenson, vice-president; Leonard P. Clark, treasurer; Frank Couch, secretary.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

A lodge of this order was formed in Canterbury in the earlier years of its introduction to this country, and had a prosperous existence. It was, however, dissolved after a time, and its records are said to be lost. It was known as Beacon Hill Lodge. The modern Odd-Fellows' society was formed Dec. 2, 1872, by Grand District Deputy Van Dalfsen, of Newburgh. The name adopted was Cornwall Lodge, No. 340, I. O. of O. F. The present officers are J. Terwilliger, N. G.; George Walker, V. G.; B. F. Oliver, Sec.; R. Cleland, Treas. The lodge meets every Monday evening at Weeks' Hall.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

This is now fifty years old, and is an institution seldom found in an unincorporated village. It was established by an act of the Legislature passed April 20, 1830. By the terms of the statute, "Nathan Westcott, Elias Hand, W. T. Cock, George Marriott, John M. Gough, and such others as shall associate with them, and shall pay two dollars and fifty cents for procuring not more than two engines and other implements necessary for extinguishing fires," were created a body corporate under the name of the "Canterbury Fire Company." The meeting to organize under the act was held at the house of B. Colter, May 10, 1830, Oliver Cromwell being called to the chair, and John M. Gough chosen secretary.

Among the early members recorded may be found the names of Elias Hand, John E. Chadeayne, W. T. Cock, Justus Sackett, Noah Townsend, Lewis Barrett, Henry Titus, Thomas F. Fish, Samuel G. Purdy, Daniel Chadeayne, Samuel Townsend, Benjamin Atkinson, Charles R. Sutherland, and Fowler Griggs. Soon after the formation of the company a small hand-engine was bought, at an expense of about $125. It was arranged with handles, so that it could be carried by four men. This rude memorial of an almost-forgotten age is still preserved at the engine-house. Hooks and ladders were of home-made construction, consisting of saplings cut in the mountains, and ironed by Hewitt & Torrey at their trip-hammer shop, near the site in later times of Nicholas Cock's factory. There was nothing extravagant in the early expenditures. The funds were often necessarily contributed by the members, and it was a matter of considerable self-sacrifice to sustain the enterprise. The first engine-house was a small frame building, and stood upon a lot owned in recent years by V. C. Kihl-mire. This building was sold to John Malloy when the company secured their present quarters. He removed it to Roeville and fitted it up as a dwelling. The company's services in extinguishing fires were first employed at the burning of Samuel Townsend's barn.

In 1836 or 1837 a second-hand suction-engine was bought at a cost of about $500. These engines remained the only equipment of the company until 1869, when an improved engine was bought, known as Highland Engine, No. 1. The new engine-house was obtained about this time, the company buying, for $2000, the lot and building previously occupied by Hunlos & McLean as a meat-market. Considerable expense was incurred in altering and fitting up the building. The use of the lower floor for election purposes and the room overhead for public meetings yields a small revenue, which, aided by other means, keeps the finances of the company in a fair condition.

The rapid growth of that part of these associated villages which takes the name of Willisville, led to the founding of a second fire company in 1868. The first officers were William J. Quigley, foreman; John K. Oliver, assistant, and John McLean, Jr., secretary. The company did not secure incorporation until March 30, 1870. The persons named in the act were E. A. Matthieson, Stephen C. Gillis, Hamilton H. Salmon, David Clark, James K. Hitchcock, and Elbert H. Champlin, and they were constituted a body corporate under the name of Storm-King Fire-Engine Company, No. 2.

The engine-house was built soon after. The first fire at which the services of the new company were employed was that of the Sagamore House, then occupied by Charles Brown. The company have a very beautiful hose carriage, built by James Reid, of Canterbury.

CORNWALL CIRCULATING LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

This was organized at Cornwall Landing, Nov. 2, 1869. Lyman Abbott was appointed chairman of the meeting, and William H. Clark, secretary. The trustees named were William P. Coolidge, E. A. Matthieson, James G. Roe, William H. Clark, Thomas Taft, N. Chatfield, Jr., E. H. Champlin, Albert Palmer, Thomas George. The library was required to be located within the bounds of School District No. 4. The fee of membership or price of a share of stock was fixed at five dollars.

Persons not owning five shares, or not owning any, might enjoy the privilege of the library by paying one dollar annually.

The building was erected in 1870. It is a substantial structure, 80 by 45, and faced on all sides with the best quality of pressed brick. It is three stories in height above the basement. The first floor is divided into stores, the rent from which is a material item of the revenue that sustains the enterprise. The second floor is occupied with the library, the reading-room, billiard parlor, and various offices. The third or upper floor is arranged as a public hall. It is 78 by 43, with a gallery at one end and a stage at the other. It has a height of 21 feet, is well ventilated, and its acoustic properties are said to be superior.

The whole building, with the library and its appointments, constitutes an enterprise seldom found in a rural village of this size. It is a distinguishing mark of the liberality as well as the culture and refinement of the people of this community. The building, with the heater, settees, and fixtures, cost about $30,000. There are now about 3500 volumes in the library. The librarian is Miss Sarah Chatfield.

THE CORNWALL PLEASURE-GROUND AND DRIVING-PARK ASSOCIATION was formed April 6, 1868. Its objects were declared to be "first, advancing the cause of agriculture by giving, at stated intervals, competitive exhibitions of agricultural products and implements; second, developing the utility and increasing the value of all domestic animals in general, by encouraging the true principles of breeding; and, in particular, promoting the power, endurance, and speed of that noblest creature of them all, the horse; third, the purchasing, leasing, and holding of the requisite amount of real and personal property necessary to consummate the general objects of the association." The capital stock was fixed at $10,000, to be divided into 500 shares. The directors named were Lewis Beach, Benjamin S. Moore, William Townsend, H. R. Hunter, William Gourley, and Thomas Heaton. The proceedings were verified before Dyer Brewer, justice of the peace, and recorded April 22d.

THE HUDSON RIVER METALLIC PAINT COMPANY OF CORNWALL

executed a certificate of incorporation which was verified Feb. 11, 1865. The capital stock was stated at $250,000, divided into 5000 shares. The trustees named were Howard Potter, Wm. Sturges, Wm. G. Lambert, John J. Monell, Frederick H. Wolcott, Charles M. Wolcott.

THE WEST POINT AND CORNWALL TURNPIKE COMPANY was authorized to organize and construct a road by a resolution of the board of supervisors, passed March 9, 1868.

THE CORNWALL OXIDE PAINT MANUFACTURING COMPANY

executed a certificate of incorporation Nov. 9, 1864. The object was stated as "mining or obtaining iron ores and minerals, and preparing them for use and consumption as a paint." The capital was fixed at 4000 shares of $25 each, not in cash but to be represented by the mines, mining contracts, lands, leases, etc., belonging to the company. The trustees named were Enoch Carter, John J. Monell, Peter Ward, and John L. Davis.

THE CORNWALL MANUFACTURING COMPANY was incorporated by a certificate executed May 13, 1868. The object was declared to be "the manufacture and sale of family and other soaps." The capital stock named was $25,000, divided into 250 shares. The trustees chosen were John S. Davis, Robert E. Ring, and Townsend E. Drew. The certificate was verified the same day before Wm. H. Clark, and recorded May 22d.

CORNWALL SAVINGS-BANK.

The preliminary meeting to organize this institution was held May 25, 1871, and the bank opened June 1st. The first officers were Wm. T. Cock, president; S. B. Young, first vice-president; Wm. J. Sherwood, second vice-president; Dr. W. H. Vail, treasurer. Other members of the board: James G. Roe, B. L. Solomon, Thomas George, Josiah G. Clark, H. H. Salmon, E. A. Mattheison, S. C. Gillis, James Brodhead, J. R. Wood, James K. Hitchcock. The president and vice-presidents remain the same. June 2, 1873, L. N. Weyant became treasurer, and still retains the position.

Total resources July 1, 1880, $24,209.58; due depositors, $23,851.19; surplus, $351.39; open accounts, 232; accounts open during six months, 25; closed, 22; amount deposited during six months, $11,480.20; withdrawn, $8,878.99; expenses of bank six months, $91.65.

X.—PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST OR OF SPECIAL NOTE.

CRO'-NEST

is just on the boundary line between the towns of Cornwall and Highlands, and rises 1418 feet above the river. It is celebrated in song and romance. Innumerable writers have immortalized its crags. The genius of poetry has peopled its surrounding defiles with fairies and gnomes, and the most enchanting productions of American literature have found here at once their "local habitation" and their enthusiasm.

BUTTER HILL

is the name applied for many years to the mountain which, like a sentinel, stands guard at the northern entrance to the Highlands. Many ingenious explanations of the appropriateness of the name have been given, but they are all rendered unnecessary by the discovery that the real name on early maps was Buttel Hill. Buttel is the German for bailiff, and is appropriate to this height, which guards the pass of the Hudson. The poet, N. P. Willis, gave to it its new name of Storm-King, by which it will undoubtedly be known through future years. Here is Mr. Willis' statement of his reasons for rechristening:

"The tallest mountain, with its feet in the Hudson, at the Highland Gap is officially the storm-king, being looked to by the whole country around as the most sure foreteller of a storm. When the white cloud-beard descends upon his breast in the morning (as if with a nod forward of his majestic head) there is sure to be a rain-storm before night. Standing aloft among the other mountains of the chain, this sign is peculiar to him. He seems the monarch, and this seems his stately ordering of a change in the weather. Should not storm-king then be his proper title?"

To climb this mountain is one of the rare attractions to summer visitors at Cornwall. There are various routes, some having the romance of difficulty and danger, others of more gentle ascent, calling for less expenditure of breath and muscle. Having reached the crowning height, let the following passage from Mr. Lewis Beach's volume tell the story of beauty and sublimity:

"The summit once gained, whilst taking the much-needed rest, the eye soon shares the fatigue of the body in its efforts to grasp the many objects that challenge its attention. There are numerous other views about Cornwall equally fine, but none of such scope to the north as the one that is here to be had.

"An entirely new feature is superadded. For the first time you have an outlook to the east and southeast. Everything about you, in every direction within the compass of the eye, is brought out in bold relief. The natural beauty of the country within a radius of sixty miles from the spot you stand upon can nowhere be surpassed. Foreground and background of the picture are equally attractive. Sparkling valleys at your feet, towering mountains in the distance, cities and villages sprinkled about, the river threading its tortuous way, hillsides discharging their silver streams, huge chasms and massive rocks, some near and others remote, all and each contribute to round out and complete a picture of unequalled grandeur. You view the spectacle from your mountain-tier seat with no intervening peaks with their hats on to obstruct the view. You may hear the music of the band at West Point wafted on the southern wind, and might look down on the parade-ground and witness the evolutions of the cadets were it not for the intervening heights of Cro'-Nest."

Mr. Beach, casting a glance backward at the times "that tried men's souls," adds the following beautiful passage:

"The student of Revolutionary history will find food for his contemplation here. There is a sermon on patient and heroic suffering in the bare rocks, for here were lighted those massive beacon-fires which ever and anon summoned the hardy militia to the defense of the Highland forts. Being the highest, the beacon here was the signal to others similarly located on hills for miles around. Half-clad signal-men watched here through storm and night and cold, so cold that more than one perished and passed to that future 'which has no king but God.' We need to get close to these men to properly appreciate their work."

SLOOP HILL.

Sloop Hill is on the south side of Murderer's Creek, and near its entrance into the Hudson. It is a place often mentioned in early accounts of this section, and the origin of its name is involved in some obscurity. It is doubtless simply a term early bestowed upon the elevation by pioneer navigators, either because of the favorable landing-place at its foot for sloops, or some other similar reason. The line between Cornwall and New Windsor passes over Sloop Hill. This is the old historic line between Orange County and Ulster as they were at first organized. Murderer's Creek (now known under the name of Moodna) is often mentioned in stating early civil divisions and early land-patents, and from their language the creek itself might be supposed to have been the line intended. The boundary between the two counties was, however, a straight line drawn through the mouth of Murderer's Creek and striking the Delaware above Port Jervis, in the vicinity of Sparrowbush. Even this is perhaps not exactly correct. The initial point was the *head of navigation on Murderer's Creek, and not the mouth of the creek. To understand that, it must be remembered that small craft could sail up the Moodna in early times for a short distance,—a feat that seems impossible to those who only know it now with its channel filled and its shallow depth of water. In connection with Sloop Hill it may be proper to remark that this locality is very near a large number of interesting Revolutionary localities in New Windsor, and to the chapter upon that town the reader is referred for further description. Sloop Hill itself was, however, used as a summit for beacon-fires, and thus Cornwall may claim something of the Revolutionary interest of this section as belonging within her lines.

There is another tradition, but with little evidence to sustain it, that a Spanish sloop at some unnamed date came to this place to trade with the Indians, but running aground the Indians murdered the crew as the quickest way of coming to an easy trade. How soon after Columbus discovered America Spanish sloops were in the habit of coming up the Hudson to trade is not stated in the tradition. This is doubtless like the wonderful tragedy of Naoman, over which generations of school-children have almost cried as they read it, purely a fiction.

CONTINENTAL SPRING

is a short distance from the West Point road, as it is called, and about half-way up the mountain. It derives its name from the local tradition that a portion of the American army was encamped in this neighborhood during the Revolutionary war, and that instead of drinking from "the same old canteen," as in the song, they drank from the crystal waters of this spring. The water bubbles from the solid rock, and is delightfully "cool, delicious, and sparkling." The spring has never been known to fail.

BLACK ROCK

is one of the mountain summits from which extensive and delightful views are obtained. The rock is said to rise about 80 feet above the mountains, and is very much of a tower,—a natural observatory, ascended by one of nature's own staircases, a series of steps in the rock. The view from this height is of surpassing beauty and grandeur. No tourist in the Highlands should fail to visit Black Rock.

GRANT'S HAUNT

is a grotto among the mountains. The rocks in and around this are piled in every conceivable shape and size. There is a wild ruggedness about the whole that may well be associated in the mind of one having a vivid fancy with the hundred-handed giants of ancient mythology. The pinnacle above has been named Spy Rock from the extensive view it commands. A curious rock near the grotto is named the "Giant's Slipper."

PICNIC ROCK

is a good place to stop for refreshments, provided a climbing-party have any. Here is a broad table, a rocky summit, over which nature has spread a cloth woven of moss and lichen, and made a convenient arrangement for seats by placing blocks of stone of varying size, adapted to children and adults.

ERLIN'S BLUFF.

Our limits will not permit us to enlarge upon the fairy stories that have become classic in American literature, and which cluster around this bluff, with its adjacent defiles. Those who have time to lose themselves in the most delightful works of Washington Irving, and in Drake's "Culprit Fay," should read them in these mountain fastnesses, in the very haunts which the poets have so peopled with their fanciful creations that even a prosaic compiler of town histories, with their saw-mills, road surveys, and similar stern "practicalities," might not be astonished if a fairy should beckon to him in these wild retreats is not far from Erlin's Bluff. It is a curious rock formation, under which a tiny cascade somehow finds its way, though no daylight is visible under the "bridge." It is near the place where the little stream empties into a mountain lake, and there is a close combination of several elements of great beauty. The massive rocks, the mountain lake with its clear depths, and the leaping cascade hiding under the rocks, and then reappearing to ripple down to the lake below.

* Beach's "Cornwall," p. 11.

(especially in the time of summer tourists), or a giant chase him down the mountain-side, hurling seven-ton rocks after him.

NATURAL BRIDGE

THE OLD RING HOMESTEAD

is situated where the road to Newburgh from Canterbury diverges to the left, leaving to the right the road to Cornwall-on-the-Hudson. There are many historic memories clustering around this now venerable mansion. Here lived David Sands, the early preacher of the Friends; in this house the meetings were held before the meeting-house west of the village was erected; still earlier, during the Revolution, it was occupied as a store by the grandfather of Robert E. Ring, and at times served the purpose of a guard-house, a detachment of troops from the New Windsor encampment being stationed there. War and peace thus met upon its grounds; preacher and soldier both passed its portals in those stormy times. To this house came the bride, Catharine Sands, and from the sacred quiet of its low rooms the dead were carried forth to rest beneath the smile of God and enter into eternal peace.

IDLEWILD

would naturally be mentioned under this head, but it is already described among village names; and as an estate it is absolutely private property, not open to general rambles, except by permission from its proprietor. In Mr. Beach's recent work it is very fully written, some thirteen pages being devoted to Idlewild alone. For those, too, who would hear numerous charming anecdotes of the poet, there are many living in Cornwall who knew him well, for he died only thirteen years ago. Mr. J. D. Sutherland was with Mr. Willis almost daily during the laying out of Idlewild and the erection of the residence. It was a chance remark of Mr. Sutherland which led to the name Idlewild; and the poet relied upon his practical judgment in the arrangement and grading of the grounds, in laying out the drives and the improvements of the glen. It was a favorite morning salutation of Mr. Willis: "Well, Major Sutherland, I want to use your brains to-day."

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The town of Cornwall has quite a large area of arable lands. It is not exactly a mountain town, although it includes a portion of the Highlands.

Around Canterbury and westward there are many fine farms. In the central and northwestern portions there are productive districts, in which a mixed and varied husbandry yields valuable returns. In the immediate vicinity of Canterbury an excellent quality of grapes is grown, forming by itself an important industry. Mr. Oliver Brewster, residing on Willow Avenue, has a very fine tract of some fifteen acres. It slopes northward from his residence, the latter standing on an elevation that commands a splendid river and mountain view. Mr. Brewster has been in the fruit-growing business for twenty-five years. He raises strawberries, raspberries, and other small fruits, but makes the culture of grapes a specialty. He sent to market in 1879 27 tons of grapes, and will send more than that for the present season (September, 1880). He raises the Concord largely, though the Isabella and other varieties are found in his fields. At the ripening season one can appreciate the enthusiasm of writers who speak of the "sunlit hills of Italy purple with ripening grapes," and scented with the delicate odor wafted upon the gentle breezes.

Daniel Clark is another extensive fruit-grower, giving most of his attention to grapes. His grounds are in the Idlewild Valley, extending up the southern slopes of the hills. His shipments are very large, amounting occasionally to 30 tons a year. He originally bought one Concord grape, from which he set 20 acres. The old parent vine bore vigorously last year, but died suddenly from an over-dose of brine.

William Sherwood also has a large graperies south of Canterbury village, and raises a large amount of grapes of superior quality. There are others who raise grapes in smaller quantities, but in the aggregate do a business of considerable extent.

Among the industrial enterprises none have perhaps achieved greater prominence than the culture of strawberries and other small fruits by Rev. E. P. Roe. (See Biographical Sketch.)

The "Red Mill," on Idlewild Brook, is a grist-mill of very early date. It was probably built by Reuben Clark, or at least passed to him early in this century, and about thirty-six years ago to his son, David Clark, the present owner.

MEAD & TAFT.

This firm is doing an extensive business at Cornwall Landing. They have a lumber-yard and a planing-mill. In connection with this they have a hardware-store, in which they deal largely in the general goods of the trade, and in all kinds of masons' materials, painting, and building materials generally. The partners are Charles H. Mead and Thomas Taft. The business was first established in 1853 by Mr. Mead at Canterbury, at the junction of the Newburgh road with Hudson Street. In 1861 the partnership was formed, and in 1868 they removed to Cornwall Landing. Their buildings were burned March 29, 1879. They were immediately rebuilt, and are now very large and convenient. A feature of their business is the manufacture of portable cottages adapted to the fashionable watering-places, and to the camp-grounds of religious and temperance associations. They are also contractors for the erection of large churches and other public buildings. Among their works may be mentioned the "Church of our Lady Star of the Sea" at Long Branch, and the Palmer House at Nyack.

ORR'S MILLS.

Among the active business men of Cornwall, Messrs. William and John Orr contribute in many ways to the development of every public interest. John Orr has flouring-mills at Mountainville, and is also postmaster at that office. William Orr & Co. operate the well-known Cornwall Mills on Murderer's Creek. They are both custom- and flouring-mills. An extensive business is done, their delivery-wagons being frequently seen through all the villages in Cornwall, and in other towns near. Their buildings are picturesquely situated near the road leading from Cornwall Station to Canterbury. On a fine site near stands the Orr House, a popular resort of summer boarders.

SUMMER BOARDING.

Perhaps this may be termed an "industrial pursuit." At least the business is industriously pursued by a large number in Cornwall. Besides the Glen Ridge House and the Orr House, already mentioned, there may be named the Smith House, Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, C. H. Smith, proprietor; the Elmer House, Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, Wm. B. Elmer, proprietor; the Linden Park House, Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, R. B. Ring, proprietor; the Lawrence House, Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, J. J. Lawrence, proprietor; the Palmer House (formerly Carswell), Cornwall-on-the-Hudson; the Mountain House, J. W. Meagher, manager; Mrs. Dunham, summer boarding; and T. M. Wilfy, summer boarding. There are also many others who receive boarders during the season, but do not announce their places formally as summer boarding-houses.

XII.—MILITARY.

The present town of Cornwall lies in the immediate vicinity of some of the most noted localities of the Revolutionary struggle, but can directly claim few or none of them as a part of her own soil. New Windsor and Newburgh, to the north, are rich in historic associations, while the town of Highlands, on the south, embraces military reminiscences of surpassing interest. The forts of the Highlands were south of what is now Cornwall, while the encampment of Clinton's command was northwest, in New Windsor, and Gen. Washington's headquarters north, in the present city of Newburgh. The names of those citizens who participated in the Revolutionary war from the present territory of Cornwall must be sought in the militia-rolls given elsewhere, and can only be determined by comparison with the names of early residents, given under various heads in this volume.

OFFICIAL ACTION, WAR OF 1861-65.

At a special town-meeting held at the house of B. L. Moore, Jan. 28, 1864, Robert E. Ring was called to the chair, and the minutes were recorded by the town clerk, Abijah Dan. It was proposed to vote on the question of the amount of bounty to be paid, each voter writing his name and the amount he voted for upon his ballot. This proposition was not accepted, but a motion for a town bounty of $50 to each volunteer was adopted. In pursuance of this action the money was obtained of the Highland Bank by executing a town note for the sum of $7800, payable Feb. 8, 1865, the note bearing date April 13, 1864.

On August 15th of the same year a special town-meeting duly called was held at Jackson's Hall, in Canterbury. It was voted to pay a bounty of $1000 to each volunteer who should enlist for one year.

The following statement of bonds issued appears in the records, the date of the bonds being Sept. 1, 1864:

12,000 " " " 1, 1866.	2,000 " " " 1, 1872.
2,000 " " " 1, 1867.	3,000 " " " 1, 1873.
3,000 " " " 1, 1868.	7,500 " " " 1, 1874.
4,000 " " " 1, 1869.	5,000 " " " 1, 1875.
10,000 " " " 1, 1870.

Feb. 7, 1865, another special town-meeting was held, and a vote passed authorizing the raising of a sufficient sum to fill the quota of the town by paying $400 to each volunteer, or to each drafted man in case of a draft, who should actually enter the service or provide a substitute.

The sum to be raised was fixed at $30,000. A war committee to act in conjunction with the supervisors was appointed, consisting of Harvey B. Adams, John Chatfield, William Avery, and Cornelius Nelson. The records appear to show $31,600 issued under this authority.

SOLDIERS' LIST.

The following list was prepared from the printed muster-in rolls of the State, but it has also received a careful revision by Mr. Isaac Denniston, of Canterbury:

William Babcock, Co. C, 124th; enl. Aug. 13, 1862.
 William S. Brooks, Co. C, 124th; enl. Aug. 9, 1862; disch. April 16, 1863, for disability.
 Thomas M. Brooks, Co. C, 124th; enl. Aug. 15, 1862; wounded at Orange Grove, Nov. 27, 1863; died of wounds Dec. 20, 1863.
 William Bordenstein, Co. C, 124th; enl. Aug. 8, 1862; wounded at Chancellorsville; trans. to Vet. Res. Corps.
 Albert J. Bunce, Co. C, 124th; enl. Aug. 7, 1862; wounded in assault at Petersburg, April 1, 1865.
 Stephen W. Brown, Co. C, 124th; enl. Aug. 14, 1862; died of typhoid fever Jan. 17, 1863.

EDWARD PAYSON ROE.

Edward Payson Roe was born on the banks of the Hudson, in the town of New Windsor, on March 7, 1838. His ancestry is more particularly referred to in the sketch of his brother, Rev. Alfred C. Roe, in this work. His early home is described in his story, "Opening a Chestnut Burr," and again referred to in the description of the quaint old garden which has so important a place in his book, "A Face Illumined." His collegiate life was passed at Williams College, with a view to preparation for the gospel ministry, and after a year at Auburn Theological Seminary, in 1862, he responded to the government's urgent call and accepted the chaplaincy of the Second New York, or Harris Light Cavalry. After two years' service in the field, Mr. Roe was appointed by President Lincoln one of the chaplains of the Fortress Monroe hospitals. Just before entering upon the performance of his duties at that point he participated as a volunteer in the celebrated raid in the spring of 1864, in which Col. Dahlgren was killed, and which had as its object the release of the Union prisoners at Richmond. Several times on this occasion he acted as aid, and was the first one sent to Washington after the raid, where he had an extended personal interview with President Lincoln. While at Fortress Monroe, Mr. Roe was largely instrumental in causing the erection of the chapel for Christian worship at that place, and of the library adjoining. He had charge of the hospital farm at that point, and from a small beginning increased its size to forty acres, growing all varieties of vegetables, and supplying the hospitals with many choice delicacies. At the close of the war he accepted a call from the Presbyterian Church at Highland Falls, N. Y., to become its pastor, and was soon engaged with the people in an effort to erect a new church edifice. His desire to aid in this work first led him to enter the lecture-field, where his lectures on topics connected with the war attracted considerable attention.

Up to the time of the burning of Chicago, Mr. Roe had never formed the definite purpose of writing a book, but the scenes of that awful event powerfully impressed him, and while the ruins were still smoking he spent several days among them. Returning home he commenced "Barriers Burned Away," and worked for a year on the story in his hours of leisure. After six or eight chapters were written they were submitted to the editors of the New York Evangelist, and at their request were left for publication. The story continued to grow, the writer often hardly keeping in advance of the paper, until fifty-two chapters were published. Long before its completion there was a demand for the publication of the story as a whole, and it was issued about the first of December, 1872, by Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co., of New York, who have published all of Mr. Roe's works. Its success was immediate, and successive editions were quickly called for. Mr. Roe's next work, "What Can She Do?" was of a very different kind, and was also widely read. Finding his health becoming impaired by the continued duties of the pastorate and of authorship, Mr. Roe was finally led to query whether the latter was not his true vocation, and to consider whether he could not exert a wider influence as a writer than as a speaker. Of this he made his next book—"Opening a Chestnut Burr"—a test, and constructed a quiet, Christian story. It proved the most popular of his works, and having decided to adopt a literary life, he removed, in the spring of 1874, to Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, near his early home, where he has since continued to reside. Here, in a pleasant home, amid the most beautiful natural scenery, he wrote his later works,—"Near to Nature's Heart," "From Jest to Earnest," "A Knight of the Nineteenth Century," "A Face Illumined," "Success with Small Fruits," "Play and Profit in My Garden," and "A Day of Fate." He is now engaged on a novel entitled "Without a Home."

In contrast to the usual experience of popular authors, Mr. Roe's works have successively sold more largely than their predecessors. The six novels written after "Barriers Burned Away" were published in the autumn of each succeeding year after 1872, and of the seven novels about 175,000 were sold in eight years. The sale of all his works in this country reaches about 250,000 copies. All of his novels have been printed in England, and are now being translated into German. His last work, "A Day of Fate," was published in the fall of 1880, and has already, within a few months, attained a sale of 27,000 copies. The first edition of his new work will comprise 25,000 volumes.

Aside from his reputation as an author, Mr. Roe is widely known as an horticulturist and cultivator of choice varieties of small fruits. Feeling the need of out-of-door exercise and mental relaxation, he at first undertook fruit cultivation as a pastime and for his own amusement. But gradually he became interested in the work, experimented with rare and choice varieties, until to-day he is recognized as one of the leading horticulturists of the United States. He has acres of all varieties of fruits, and makes large shipments of plants to all parts of the country. The demand for his plants is immense, and his spring catalogue of fruits for 1881 comprises twenty-four printed pages. He employs a large number of men, and leads, in his dual capacity of author and fruit cultivator, a busy and industrious life. His published works on horticultural subjects, above referred to, have met with ready appreciation by the public and attained a large sale.

Mr. Roe was married on Nov. 24, 1863, to Miss Anna P., daughter of Dr. David Sands, of New York, late of A. B. & D. Sands, druggists of that city, and has five children living, namely: Paulina Sands, Martha Ferris, Elting P., Sarah Theresa, and Lindley Murray. Edward P. Roe, Jr., died in infancy.

Mr. Roe is recognized as one of the leading and most enterprising citizens of Cornwall, and is actively interested in every good work.

WILLIAM S. BROWN.

William S. Brown was born in the town of Cornwall, on Aug. 3, 1809. His parents were John and Hannah (Cronk) Brown, the former of whom was also born in the town, and engaged in farming near the residence of David Cromwell. The father of John emigrated from England prior to the Revolutionary war, and located in Cornwall. Among the other children were William, Thomas Nathaniel, Frank, Amelia, who married Martin Hallock, of Monroe; and Ann, who married Edward Coffee, of Cornwall. The children of John and Hannah C. Brown were sixteen in number, of whom ten reached mature years, namely: Ann (wife of E. B. St. John, of Cornwall), William S., Henry, Edward, John, Hedges, James, Elliot, Louisa (who married John Requa, of New York), and Esther (who married Baldwin Fox, of Brooklyn).

The early educational opportunities of Mr. Brown were limited to six months' schooling, three by an old Quaker, Andrew Sutherland, and three by an English gentleman in Canterbury. At the age of fifteen years he commenced to learn the trade of dressing deer-hides for buckskin with John Golow, of Vail's Gate, in the town of New Windsor, then known as Tooker's Gate, where he remained four years. He then removed to New York, and worked in the employ of the Dry-Dock Company, at the head of Avenue D, for two years. The next six or seven years was spent as a carter in New York City, at the end of which time he engaged in lime-burning for Harvey Raymond & Co., of Brooklyn. He removed from there to Rockland, Me., where he engaged in the manufacture of lime for fourteen years. His health then failing him, he returned to New York and went into the brokerage and commission business, where he continued about seven years. On April 2, 1857, he purchased 86 of the 100 acres of land that he now occupies in Cornwall, of Rev. Jonathan Silliman, and took up his residence in that town, where he has engaged in farming operations until the present time, making a specialty of fattening and dealing in live-stock. He has taken an active interest in local affairs, and is recognized as one of the substantial, enterprising, and public-spirited citizens of the town. He was elected supervisor of Cornwall in 1865, and has filled other town offices with credit.

Mr. Brown was married on March 20, 1830, to Martha, daughter of John and Ann Rose, of Flatbush, L. I. She was born April 10, 1807, and died May 23, 1876. The children have been Louisa Ann, who died in childhood; George Ogden, died Aug. 20, 1856; John Ross, engaged in the commission business in New York; Hannah M., wife of Alpha Phillips, of Blooming-Grove; Charles G., who died in the spring of 1881; Hezekiah P., a commission merchant in New York City; and Harriet F., wife of Robert S. Talbot, of Blooming-Grove.

JOHN ORR.

John Orr was born in County Armagh, Ireland, on Dec. 31, 1820, and was a son of David and Elizabeth (Stewart) Orr, the former being a successful miller in the city of Armagh. His grandparents were John and Susan (Orr) Orr, and his great-grandfather was Robert, who was born in Scotland and removed to the north of Ireland about the year 1700. The former was a miller by trade, and the latter a wheelwright. The children of David and Elizabeth S. Orr were David, who died in childhood; John; Jane Ann, who married Joseph S. Pruden, of New York City; Susan, who married George G. Sims, of Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs. Elizabeth S. Orr died in 1822, and David Orr married, for a second wife, Jane Stewart, a cousin of his first wife. Of this union were born William; Mary Elizabeth, who married John J. Van Duzer, of Cornwall; and Sarah, who married Jesse B. Birdsall, of Newburgh. David Orr died in 1843, aged about fifty-two, and his wife, Jane Stewart, in the spring of 1881, in the town of Monroe, Orange Co., where she was residing with her daughter, Mrs. Van Duzer. Her remains were interred in Woodlawn Cemetery, in the lot of her son William.

John Orr

John Orr received a common-school education in his native country, and afterwards learned the trade of a miller with his father. In 1842 he came to America and first located in New Windsor, where he worked in Morton's mill, at Vail's Gate, for a short time. He then removed to Shawangunk, Ulster Co., working in James Mitchell's mill for one year and a half, and then in the Walden mills, Montgomery, for one year. In October, 1844, he married Mary, daughter of Robert and Mary (Cooper) Fulton, of New Windsor, and on April 1, 1845, took up his residence in Cornwall, going into partnership with Robert E. Ring, at the Townsend mill. After three years he purchased his present mill at Mountainville, of Samuel Ketcham, and ran that for seven years. He then leased the old Townsend mill for five years, and operated both mills for three years. At the end of that time he surrendered the balance of his lease of the Townsend mill to his brother William. In 1860 he formed a partnership with the latter and Joseph S. Pruden, and operated the Mountainville mill under the firm-name of John Orr & Co. Shortly after the firm purchased the Townsend cotton-factory property and grist-mill, and operated that under the name of William Orr & Co. This arrangement continued until 1865, when Joseph S. Pruden withdrew from the firm, which was changed to J. & W. Orr. In 1866 the latter erected the "Cornwall Flouring-Mills," at a cost of about $30,000, on the site of the Townsend mill, and continued business there until 1877, when John Orr disposed of his interest to John Mitchell, and resumed the operation of his Mountainville mill, which he repurchased in 1875, and where he continues at the present time.

Mr. Orr is recognized as one of the influential citizens of Cornwall, and through a long business career has earned the reputation of an upright and honorable man. Besides his mill property at Mountainville, he owns the Samuel Ketcham residence and farm at that place, the Woodbury factory in the town of Monroe, and other real estate. He is popular in the town, and held the office of supervisor in 1868 and 1869. He has taken a deep interest in the local development of Mountainville, and lent liberal support to the progressive and elevating movements of his day. He is a member of the Bethlehem Presbyterian Church. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Orr, of whom five survive, namely: Susan A., wife of Lewis A. Van Cleft, Woodbury; Addie; Margaret, wife of D. E. Sutherland, of Cornwall; Emma; and Jessie.

WILLIAM ORR.

William Orr was born in the city and county of Armagh, Ireland, Dec. 23, 1830, where his father was engaged in successful business as a miller. His ancestry is more particularly referred to in the biographical sketch of his older brother, John Orr, in this work.

On Feb. 11, 1847, Mr. Orr came to this country, having decided to make his home in the New World, where several sisters and a brother had preceded him. He resided for one year with his brother John, at Cornwall, and attended school at the excellent institution of Rev. Alfred C. Roe, of that place. During the same year he worked in the mill of Sylvanus Howell, in Shawangunk village, Ulster Co., for two months, performing his work to the full satisfaction of his employer. The next three years were spent in learning the miller's trade with his brother John, at Mountainville. In 1851 he went to Haverstraw, N. Y., where he operated a mill as first miller for the very remunerative stipend of eleven dollars a month and his board. After one year he filled a similar position in the mill of James R. Dickson, of Newburgh, at sixteen dollars a month. He remained there nearly a year, and then worked in the employ of his brother John, at Mountainville, from 1853 to 1855. In the latter year he operated the Mountainville mill for his brother at a salary of five hundred dollars. The year following he had a quarter interest in the profits of the mill, his partners being John Orr and Thomas Fulton. The third year he was an equal partner with his brother in conducting the mill. In the years 1858 and 1859, Mr. Orr operated the old Townsend mill on his own account, meeting with great success. In 1860 he became one of the firm of John Orr & Co., consisting of John Orr, Joseph S. Pruden, and himself, and operated the mill at Mountainville. Subsequently the same copartners purchased the Townsend mill property, and ran that, under the firm-name of William Orr & Co., until 1865, when Mr. Pruden withdrew, and the firm of J. & W. Orr was formed. In 1866 the latter firm erected the Cornwall Flouring-Mills, on the site of the Townsend mill, at a cost of about thirty thousand dollars. The building, 40 by 80 feet in dimensions, comprises three stories and a basement, and is one of the finest of its kind in the county.

The firm of J. & W. Orr continued to carry on a successful business until 1877, when John Orr disposed of his interest to John Mitchell of Meadow Brook Farm, Cornwall, and the firm of William Orr & Co. was organized. The latter continued to run the Cornwall Flouring-Mills until April 1, 1881, when Mr. Mitchell disposed of his interest to William Orr, who is now operating the mill with great success.

Mr. Orr is recognized as one of the most intelligent and enterprising of the business men of Cornwall. By close attention to business and industrious and economical habits he has accumulated a good estate, and earned the respect and esteem of a large circle of friends. In 1867 he purchased the homestead of the late William H. Townsend, near his mill, and soon after began entertaining summer guests, in common with some of the best families of Cornwall. In 1870 he erected his present handsome and attractive dwelling, known as the "Moodna Mansion," on the site of the Townsend residence, and has since continued to entertain each season, in a proper manner, a large number of guests. About 1872 he rebuilt the building known as "Overlook Cottage," near his mansion, for John Mitchell, who occupied it two seasons. Since that time Mr. Orr has used it, in connection with his house, for the accommodation of his guests.

Mr. Orr is a popular member of the Republican party of his town, and was a supervisor in 1880. He was married on Jan. 27, 1857, to Margaret (Young) Elliot, daughter of William Drummond Elliot and Jean Stewart Lamb Elliot, of Glasgow, Scotland. Seven of the eight children are living, viz.: John, engaged in business with his father; William Elliot, entry clerk with Lawson Valentine & Co., of New York; David Lincoln; Maggie; Mary; Florence; and Nellie P. Orr.

CHARLES H. MEAD.

Charles H. Mead was born at Phillipstown, Putnam Co., N. Y., on July 24, 1831. His parents were Joseph N. and Phebe (Garrison) Mead, and his maternal grandfather, Judge Harry Garrison, one of the earliest settlers of Phillipstown, and a representative of a pioneer family on Long Island. Judge Garrison was a prominent citizen of Putnam County for many years, and held several offices of trust and responsibility. He was a gentleman of the olden time, of unblemished reputation, and at one time owned a large number of slaves. He gave them their freedom in 1823, but a number refused to leave, and remained with him through life. His grandfather on his father's side was Abram Mead, and his grandmother Hannah Mead, whose father, also named Abram, at one time owned all of Cold Spring, N. Y. His great-grandmother on his father's side was Elizabeth, daughter of Gen. Nicholson, of Revolutionary fame.

Joseph N. Mead was born near Norwich, Conn., the family seat of the Meads. In early manhood he removed to Cold Spring, Putnam Co., and for a great many years owned and ran a first-class sailing-packet for carrying passengers between Albany and New York. Subsequently he sailed from the foundry at Cold Spring to New York, until the destruction of his vessel by fire. Capt. Mead was a man of fine presence, and one of the most popular and highly-respected of the early sailing-masters on the Hudson.

B. S. Ketcham

The Ketcham family is one of the oldest in the town of Cornwall. Long prior to the Revolutionary war Samuel Ketcham, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, located where John Orr now resides at Mountainville, where he passed his life engaged in the arduous agricultural operations incident to the pioneer development of the country, and where he operated an early grist-mill. His remains are interred upon the farm. He was a large landholder, owning several miles square in that locality. His descendants through several generations settled around him, and the place was known as Ketchamtown until within a few years, when the opening of the railroad and the establishment of the station and post-office at that point gave it the less distinctive name of Mountainville. Samuel Ketcham had three sons, Samuel, Joseph, and Benjamin, all of whom settled at Ketchamtown. Samuel resided where the late Joseph Sayer lived, Joseph where Sherburn Shaw resides, and Benjamin where the subject of this sketch lives. The latter served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war. Of himself and wife, Mary, was born a large family of children, viz.: Abraham, Charles, James, Joseph, Hannah, who married Martin Pempelton, and Ann, who became the wife of Daniel C. Carpenter. Abraham lived and died in Sussex County, N. J.; James, in the town of Monroe; and Joseph spent the most of his life in New York City, dying, however, on the homestead farm.

Benjamin Ketcham died May 18, 1833, aged eighty years, and his wife on Sept. 5, 1832, aged eighty-two.

Charles Ketcham, son of Benjamin, was born on his father's farm, Oct. 26, 1786, and passed his entire life as a farmer on the home place. His wife was Ann Smith, born April 18, 1786, died Aug. 11, 1851, and the issue of the union were Daniel C., born Nov. 14, 1813, died in 1854; Benjamin S., born Jan. 4, 1819; and Eliza Jane, born July 13, 1823, died April 22, 1864. Charles Ketcham died June 1, 1847.

Benjamin S. Ketcham was born on the homestead of his grandfather, where he now resides, on the date indicated above. He has passed his entire life upon the property, with slight exception, and is the third generation of his family who have resided on the spot. His education was derived at the district school of his neighborhood. During the year 1836 he clerked in a store at Cornwall. Subsequently he worked the homestead farm on shares; but after his marriage, in 1846, he farmed it on his own account. The farm comprises two hundred and twenty acres.

Mr. Ketcham is the last of a large family residing in the neighborhood of Mountainville, and through long years of faithful and honest toil has worthily represented the name. While a man of modest pretensions, not given to display, but living an unostentatious and humble life, he has enjoyed a wide influence in the community, and been recognized as one of the leading men of his locality. He served as a justice of the peace for four terms, declining further election; and while not a church member, has, by a life of integrity and honorable dealing, commanded the respect and esteem of all who knew him. He was married on April 29, 1846, to Mercy, daughter of Nathaniel and Rebecca (Cornell) Brown, and his children have been Charles, who is in trade at Mountainville, and a leading and influential citizen; Theodore, who is cultivating the home farm; Ann E., who died in infancy; and Olive A., wife of James Barton, of Mountainville.

Wm. L. A. Mead

After the burning of his vessel he located at Garrison's Landing, Putnam Co., where he built the dock, residence, and store. He engaged in trade and kept a public-house at that point until his demise, in 1841. His wife survived him many years, passing away at a ripe old age in January, 1879. The children were Mary Jane, who married James D. Faurot, of Fort Montgomery; Joseph Henry, deceased; Hannah Elizabeth, of New York City, widow of Sylvanus Coursen; William Augustus, who died in childhood; Charles Henry; and Sydney, who died in infancy.

Until the age of nine years the subject of this sketch resided with his parents, and received his early instruction from Rev. Mr. Williams, an Episcopal clergyman at Phillipstown. After the death of his father he went to reside with his sister, at Fort Montgomery, where he attended the district school. When seventeen years of age he removed to Cornwall, Orange Co., and commenced to learn the trade of a carpenter with Daniel Taft. In 1853 he opened a shop of his own at the junction of the Newburgh road and Hudson Street, in Canterbury, where he remained until the year 1861. In the latter year he formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Thomas Taft, under the firm-name of Mead & Taft, their shop being near the old Catholic church at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson. In 1871 the firm removed to Cornwall Landing, where they erected a large frame mill and an extensive addition to the dock. On March 29, 1877, their entire establishment was destroyed by fire, but was replaced the same season by the large three-story brick building which the firm now occupy. Here the firm of Mead & Taft are doing a large building business, and their establishment is known far and wide as one of the most successful of its kind in the country. Their building is one of the largest, most complete, and conveniently arranged of its kind, and the variety and quality of the work done are not surpassed by any similar establishment in the United States. The firm do the finest panel work that can be done, manufacture large numbers of hard-wood mantels, and have contracted for and built many large houses and churches in different parts of the country, including 110 cottages at Long Branch; the Elberon Hotel, New Jersey; all the cottages at that popular sea-side resort; the Smith House, at Highlands, N. J.; Palmer House, Nyack; and the church of "Our Lady Star of the Sea," at Long Branch.

Mr. Mead was married in June, 1854, to Mary E., daughter of Daniel Taft, of Cornwall, and has a family of eleven children. His son, Charles S. Mead, is engaged in business with him. Harry G. Mead, another son, is the contracting agent for the Canada Southern Railroad in New York.

MONROE.

I.—SITUATION, BOUNDARIES, AREA, TITLE.

MONROE is the southeast town of the county. It is bounded north by Blooming-Grove, Cornwall, and Highlands, east and south by Rockland County, west by Warwick, Chester, and Blooming-Grove. Its area is given by the equalization table of the board of supervisors, 1879-80, as 70,049 acres, but, as in the case of all other towns, this is only an approximate statement. The total assessed valuation for the year 1879-80 was $2,182,910, and the whole amount of tax paid upon that basis was $17,161. The title to the soil of Monroe is mainly derived through the Chesebrough Patent. The town was first named from that patent. For a full statement reference is made to the chapter on patents in the General History.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

The first striking feature of this town is the well-nigh continuous valley which divides this town into two nearly equal parts, and which has been made the line of the Newburgh Short-Cut Branch of the Erie

Railroad. Through the northern part of this valley Woodbury Creek, which has one of its sources in Hazzard Lake, flows northward, and in Cornwall unites with Murderer's Creek. Not far south from the sources of this stream are the head-waters of the Ramapo, which flows southward into the county of Rockland. The summit between these two valleys is low, and the rivulets of the two streams, flowing in opposite directions, are found very near to each other. The eastern angle of the town is drained by Poplopen's Creek, which receives from the southwest a branch of considerable extent. Various branches of these several streams are found, and nearly the whole of the town is drained by them. The ponds in this town are numerous and of surpassing beauty. (See General History.)

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENTS.

The southern portion of Orange County, including Monroe, was settled mostly from the Eastern States, or from Long Island. The families were generally of English ancestry, first having settled in the East, and at a later period removed west of the Hudson. Just when the settlement commenced in Monroe is not very accurately determined. All the accounts of Revolutionary times indicate a population of considerable numbers upon this territory. The oldest patent in this section is the Chesekook, which was granted in 1702. There was little or no settlement for some years following that date. Various writers have mentioned 1742 as about the time of the first settlement along the Ramapo Valley. The Smiths were in this town at as early a day as 1727, and the name "Smith's Clove" appears in the earliest town records of Cornwall, 1765. Satterly's Mill is mentioned at this time also, and other names from the territory of what is now Monroe or near it.

The records of Cornwall having been preserved, and also the names attached to the Revolutionary articles of association, we can determine all the leading families residing before the Revolution upon the territory of the four present towns formed out of Cornwall. After the lapse of one hundred and ten years, it cannot be expected that the location of all of them can be determined, either with respect to the farms they occupied or the present towns organized upon this territory.

The following names are taken from those records and lists as having belonged to the present territory of Monroe. For others still not identified reference is made to the chapter upon Cornwall, where they are given in full.

Henry Brewster was commissioner of schools in Monroe, 1799. His name appears in the records of Cornwall prior to 1775. The Brewsters were in Blooming-Grove mostly, but the name appears also in other town records.

Elijah Barton probably lived on the Benjamin Case farm of late years. Roger Barton is also mentioned before the Revolution.

John Bull, mentioned in Cornwall records, is supposed to have lived on the boundary of Warwick and Monroe. Ebenezer Bull is also mentioned.

John Belcher's homestead was probably the present Mead place at Ramapo. Adam Belcher is also mentioned in the early records.

Robert Brock. The Brocks in early times lived in the mountains near Braymertown.

John Brooks. His homestead was probably the present place of Benton Brooks.

Abram Butler. The families of this name in early times were in the south part of Monroe, near the New Jersey line.

Henry Cock came from Long Island just at the close of the Revolution. He remained for a time at Nicholas Townsend's, in Monroe, and then settled two miles west of Newburgh, where David Foster afterwards lived. His children were Jacob, of Monroe; William, of McKnight's Mills, Monroe; Edmund, of the Duncan place, Canterbury; Charles;

Stephen; Mrs. William Titus; Mrs. Zebulon Townsend; and Hannah, who died unmarried. Nicholas Cock, the father of the three brothers, carriage manufacturers at Canterbury, was a son of William. The children of Jacob Cock were Anthony, Elijah, Jacob, Jr., Mrs. Isaac Titus, Mrs. David Ketcham, Mrs. Hannah Seaman, Mrs. Clark Smith, and Mary, unmarried. Mr. Charles Cock, merchant at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, is a son of Anthony.

A. Cunningham. The old Cunningham homestead was the present place of Peter P. Parrott. A. Cunningham, Jr., is also mentioned.

David Compton's homestead was the present place of Harrison Compton, and has been in the family from before the Revolution. Jacob Compton, both Sr. and Jr., are also mentioned in the early records.

P. Cashaday (Cassidy). Timothy Galloway speaks of one Cassidy, a tailor, very old, sixty years ago or more, who lived in Monroe, near the line of Blooming-Grove.

Solomon Cromwell. An old Cromwell homestead was near the line of Blooming-Grove,—the Daniel Vail place of later times.

William Conklin. An old tavern stand at Bakerstown, near Monroe village, was a Conklin homestead.

Joseph Davis' homestead was where James Wilkes now lives. A grandson, Cornelius Davis, lives in Chester.

Robert Armstrong was path-master of district No. 34 in Cornwall, 1775.

Owen Nobles was connected with the Stirling Iron-Works at an early day.

Samuel Robbins and Philip Robbins were doubtless in Monroe. They are mentioned in the records of Cornwall prior to the Revolution.

James McLaughlin and W. M. McLaughlin are named in early Cornwall records before the Revolution.

John Earle was chosen in 1765 a fence-viewer for Woodbury Clove. He lived near Highland Mills. His sons were Peter, John, Solomon. Samuel Earle is also mentioned in the old records, and the name of Richard also appears.

Peter Earle's homestead was at the south point of Schunemunk Mountain. He was the grandfather of Thomas R. Earle, now a merchant at Turner's. Thomas R. was the son of Daniel.

William Fitzgerald. An early Fitzgerald homestead was in Dutch Hollow, near the line of Warwick.

Alexander Galloway probably lived in the neighborhood of the Dickerman place, on the turnpike. Sanders Galloway is also mentioned in the early records, and likewise George.

Jacob Galloway was an early resident. The old homestead was on Rye Hill, the Webb property of the present time, late that of John K. Roe. He had a son James, who had two sons—Thomas and James—and three daughters,—Mrs. Jacobus, of New York; Mrs. Fitch, of Warwick; and Mrs. Lewis, of Monroe.

Monroe, N. H.

James, Jr., removed to Elmira. Thomas had a son Timothy, who resides at Turner's, and from him these items and others have been obtained. The old homestead remained in the family for three generations, and was finally sold by Thomas Galloway.

James Galloway, named as a path-master of district No. 24 in 1775, was probably the first James mentioned above.

Elijah Green. In early times the Greens were on the east side of Mombasha Pond.

Vincent Helms was chosen constable in 1775. The name of Helmsburgh, given to a part of Monroe south of Mombasha Lake and west of the south field, undoubtedly indicates the place where the families of that name lived before the Revolution. Thomas Helms appears as security for Vincent Helms, constable, in 1775. If he was not the father of Vincent, he was evidently a man of more property, and considered "good" for the amount of money a constable might chance to have in his possession. Phineas Helms and Brewster Helms are also mentioned.

Jonathan Hallock lived near Highland Mills. His father was one of the earliest settlers. Jonathan Hallock, probably a son, was mentioned in 1799 as a town officer of Monroe.

John Hanse was path-master in 1775 of district No. 45, Cornwall. He, or some one of the same name, was also path-master of district No. 25, in Monroe, twenty-four years later.

Samuel Knight. Knight's Mills were well known for many years. They had been owned for a time by William Cock. They are in the hands of the Knight family at the present time. Doubtless Samuel Knight lived in that neighborhood.

Isaac Lamoreux and John Lamoreux are both mentioned in the Cornwall records before the Revolution, and the name is very frequent in the records of Monroe, commencing in 1799,—Peter Lamoreux, Sr., and Jr., also Luke Lamoreux.

Henry Mapes lived near Monroe village, on the place now owned by the heirs of Dr. Andrews. Benjamin Mapes, Smith Mapes, and Bethuel Mapes are all mentioned before the Revolutionary war. Mr. Everett Mapes, now of Turner's, does not connect these names to his family line, but states that there were several distinct families of this name.

Daniel Miller's homestead was in the vicinity of Mombasha Pond, though either he or another of the same name lived also near Turner's Station. There are also mentioned, in the Cornwall records before the Revolution, Garret, John Jr., William Jr., Jonathan, Philip, Aaron, John, James, Joshua (path-master of district 26, 1775), Adam, Benjamin, Joseph, Robert.

Joseph Patterson. This name is frequent in Monroe, and probably the one named in the old records lived here.

Jacob Parliaman was path-master of district No. 46 for Cornwall before the Revolution.

Edward Robbins lived in Smith's Clove before the Revolution.

Andrew Stewart and Luther Stewart are named in the early records.

Capt. Austin Smith was chosen a fence-viewer "for Woodbury Clove," and assessor for district 5 in 1775.

Jonas Smith was path-master of district 33 in 1775.

Nathaniel Seeley, Sr. and Jr. One of them was chosen in 1765 overseer of highways for a district "from James Sears' to Satterly's Mill." Nathaniel Seeley, of Smith's Clove, is mentioned in the accounts of Claudius Smith as having been robbed.*

David Smith was a justice of the peace in 1765, and the same year was an overseer of the highway "from Gregory's to John Earle's, on the Clove road." Other Smiths not named above, found in Cornwall records prior to the Revolution, are Francis, Samuel (path-master of district 22, 1775), James, Timothy Jr., Joseph, Hans, Daniel, Elisha.

Julius Smith was overseer of the highway in 1765 "from his house to Carr's, and from his house to Dunbar's."

Hophni Smith was chosen a constable in 1765 "for Smith's Clove," and also in 1775. He, or one of the same name, was the first collector of Monroe, 1799.

Thomas Smith was overseer of highways in 1765 "from John Earle's to Caves." His name is on the list of attorneys in 1770.

Wm. Thorn was a justice of the peace in 1770, and lived at what is now Highland Mills.

Nicholas Townsend came from Long Island not long before the Revolution and settled in Monroe, where Stephen Smith now lives. The old house was built of home-made brick manufactured on the spot, and about twice the size of modern brick. The house now standing is the same, only very much modernized. Mr. Townsend had no sons. Three daughters were Mrs. Jacob Cock, Mrs. Wm. Cock, and Mrs. James Hallock. Miss Phebe, a daughter of Wm. Cock, resides at Canterbury.

Tobias Weygant. He, or one of the same name, was chosen a town officer of Monroe at the first town-meeting, 1799. That meeting was held at the house of John Weygant, and that was the place now owned by Russell Liffert. John Weygant had one son, John C. The children of the latter were Mrs. Charles F. Ford, Mrs. Abram Weygant, Mrs. Banghart Weygant, Mrs. Alfred Cooper, Mrs. Rachel McKelsey, Henry, Benjamin, Frank. There was also a Tobias Weygant in what is now Highlands at an early day.

James Wilkes, Sr. and Jr., are mentioned in the Cornwall records prior to 1775; also Richard Wilkes.

In the following memorandum the location of a part of the officers named at the first town-meeting is given:

James D. Secor, the first town clerk, lived near the present creamery on the Isaac Thompson place. A son of Mr. Secor was a captain in the militia in 1812. Jonathan Taylor, one of the first school commissioners, lived near Highland Mills. Moses Cunningham, one of the first assessors, lived at Greenwood Iron-Works. The old homestead is still in the possession of the family, and is owned by George Cunningham. Obadiah Cunningham, one of the first road commissioners, probably lived at Greenwood Iron-Works. Jonathan Hallock, school commissioner in 1799, lived near Highland Mills. Richard Wilkes, school commissioner in 1799, lived near the Greenwood Iron-Works. Hophni Smith, collector in 1799, lived at the north end of Mombasha Pond. Robert Lamoreux, fence-viewer in 1799, probably lived in the well-known neighborhood of the Lamoreux family. Charles Cunningham lived also near the iron-works at Greenwood. John Mapes lived west of Monroe village, on the present Nathaniel Clark place. John Mapes is said to have owned a mile square. Amos Miller lived near the present George Fitzgerald place. Jeremiah Trickey lived a mile from Turner's, on the present Eunice Lewis farm.

Linus Rider lived on "the Ridge" west of Highland Mills. Daniel Hallock lived at Highland Mills. Patrick Ford lived near Woodbury Falls, on the present place of Byron Ford, a descendant, the property having remained in the family through four generations. David Ford was a son of Patrick Ford, and the children of David Ford were Charles T., Benjamin, John, Townsend, Henry, David, Jr., William, Mrs. Peter B. Bush, Mrs. Charles Campbell, and Mrs. Milton Pembleton. Charles T. Ford, Jr., a son of Charles T., is the present popular proprietor of the old Turner Hotel, at Turner's Station. Jesse Lamoreux was the father of Robert Lamoreux of later times, and lived in the Dickerman neighborhood. Solomon Earle lived on "the Ridge" near the Highland mills. James Smith, Jr., lived in Dutch Hollow valley near the Warwick line. Morris Pilgrim lived about a mile west of Turner's, on the present place of his daughter, Mrs. Arminda B. Townsend. James Miller (3) lived near George Fitzgerald's place, at old Monroe village. Henry Wood lived in Smith's Lower Clove. Tobias Weygant lived at Highland Mills. Nathaniel Taylor lived south of Highland Mills; property still in the family. Adam Belcher lived at Southfield, on the well-known Coffey place. Stephen Davenport, an old Davenport place, was the present Alexander Thompson place, about a mile south of Turner's. John Bull lived near Satterlytown. David Rogers probably lived at Southfield. Isaac J. Lamoreux lived a mile east of Turner's. Jeremiah Trickey lived at what was known as Turkeytown, southeast of Turner's. James Cromwell lived about two miles west of Monroe village, still known as the old Cromwell place, on the borders of Round Pond. Richard Woodhull lived on the present place of Mrs. Campbell. Jonathan Hallock lived near Highland Mills. His father was an early speaker in Friends' meetings.

Charles Webb was also a noted speaker. Robert Caton lived at the Upper Smith's Clove, and was a member of the Friends' meeting.

TORYISM IN MONROE.

No history of Monroe can be written without touching upon this subject. It has some unpleasant features, because it is proper to admit, certainly after the lapse of a century, that there were loyalists or Tories who were good citizens,—men of integrity, men whose personal character was above reproach, men who honestly believed that the government of the English crown was their lawful government; that resistance to it was rebellion, unqualified treason. Such men scorned to take advantage of the state of war for the purpose of neighborhood murder or of miscellaneous robbery. In speaking of such men as loyalists or Tories, no descendants need to blush for their ancestors. Impartial history requires the truth to be told, yet it is not right to unnecessarily decry the honor or the sincerity of such men. Nevertheless, there was a class of Tories, or men who used that name as a cover to their proceedings, who became simply highway robbers, taking advantage of the unsettled state of the country to perpetrate their crimes. To this class must evidently be assigned the Cow-Boys of the Highlands, and perhaps no one of the towns of Orange furnished more or better hiding-places for these guerrillas than the town of Monroe. The story of Claudius Smith is given in the General History.

AN UNUSUAL CASE OF ARREST LONG AFTER THE COMMISSION OF A CRIME.

In a newspaper of 1820 occurs the following article:

"GOSHEN, Sept. 4, 1820.

"On Thursday morning last, a man by the name of Gilbert Horton, about forty-four years old, of the town of Monroe, was brought to Goshen jail, charged with having committed a murder twenty years ago!"

"A great variety of particulars in relation to this affair are already in circulation, and we deem it no infringement of the rights and privileges of any of the parties concerned to publish the most correct statement we have been able to collect. Our readers will expect it, we shall therefore give it to them.

"In the year 1800, a man named Amos Wood, living at or near Butter Hill, in the Highlands, died very suddenly: he was well in the evening and in the morning was found dead. We do not learn that any suspicions of murder were entertained at the time, or that the body underwent any examination. A report was prevalent that Horton had been intimate with Mrs. Wood some time before Mr. Wood's death, but for the proof of this we cannot vouch. It is, however, true that soon after the death of Mr. Wood, Horton and Mrs. Wood lived together as man and wife.

"Some time after the death of Wood (how long we are unable to say) circumstances were unfolded which caused Mrs. Wood to be apprehended on charge of having murdered her husband. It was said she had been to Newburgh or New Windsor, and procured arsenic with which she poisoned him. She accordingly was arraigned at the Circuit Court in this county, and after the district attorney had gone through with his testimony, the presiding judge told him if he had nothing more to offer against her she must be discharged, and she was accordingly set at liberty. This woman has been dead several years. If our recollection is correct, some suspicion was attached to Horton at the time as having had a hand in the death of Mr. Wood, but he has never been apprehended for it until now.

"About five or six years ago Horton was apprehended in the town of Monroe for breaking open and robbing a house or store in Sussex County, N. J. He then appeared terrified at the idea of going to State prison, and (as the story goes, but this he now denies) he called two of his acquaintances aside and told them he had been once to the State prison, and that he had rather be hung than go there again, at the same time asserting that he alone poisoned Wood. He then requested them to go before a magistrate, qualify to his declaration, and have him apprehended for murder. This was, however, declined. In what manner he got clear of the robbery we are not informed; report states that he turned State's evidence and exposed his accomplices, but this he denies.

"It seems that Mr. Wood left a son, who has been absent from this part of the country for several years, and soon after his return heard the confession of Horton. He immediately resolved to have him brought to justice. Horton was accordingly apprehended, but made his escape. Mr. Wood, however, resolutely pursued him, and after faithfully traversing the mountains about a week, he discovered him near the mouth of his subterranean hiding-place among the rocks. He was taken by surprise, and had no opportunity to defend himself. Mr. Wood presented a gun to his breast, telling him the moment he attempted to stir or make any resistance he would blow him through, whilst another person in his company secured his hands. He had in his hand a cane with a sword or dagger in it, and a knife was found on him when he was brought to jail.

"Horton was convicted of manslaughter, and went from this jail to State prison, but was pardoned at the solicitation of his mother, when his term had about half expired. The circumstances of this transaction are briefly these: One James Mapes was deputized, or about to be deputized, to arrest Horton on some legal process. Horton was determined not to be arrested. He seized a club and warned those who were around him to stand off, but Mapes approaching rather too near received a blow on his head which fractured his skull, and was considered the cause of his death."

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

This town was organized in 1799 under the name of Cheseekook, that being the name of the patent upon the territory of which the town was located. By an act of the Legislature passed April 2, 1801, the name was changed to "Southfield." This was not satisfactory, though it remained the name for several years. April 6, 1808, another act was passed conferring the name Monroe,—in honor, it is presumed, of the distinguished statesman who afterwards became President of the United States.

From the records of the town clerk's office we obtain the following account of the organization:

FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

"At an annual town-meeting held at the house of John Weygant, in Smith's Lower Clove, by the freeholders and inhabitants of Cheseekooks on the first Tuesday in April, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine; Justices Michael Hay and Moses Cunningham present.

"Voted, Justices is to direct the size and form of the pounds.

"Voted, This meeting is adjourned to the house of Charles Cunningham the next ensuing meeting."

We take the following additional notes from the town records. The first volume bears upon its first page the following order or request:

"We, the subscribers, do request James D. Secor to deliver the records of the old town of Cornwall to James Roe, which he promises to deliver to Jeremiah Clark, Jr., Town Clerk of the town of Cornwall.

(Signed)

"MICHAEL HAY,

"SELAH STRONG, Supervisors.

"ANSELM HELMS,

"MOSES CUNNINGHAM,

"DAN HARRISON, Overseers of the Poor.

"Feb. 17, 1800."

The question may arise whether this request was complied with. The records mentioned are now (1880) in the town clerk's office of Blooming-Grove instead of Cornwall.

It would seem that the town which retained the name after a division was entitled to keep the old records, with or without an order.

A special town-meeting was deemed necessary soon after the annual meeting, the record of which is as follows:

"At a special town-meeting called by the inhabitants of Cheseekooks:

"Voted, That the laws respecting chattle from other towns at our last town-meeting be confirmed with some amendments on this 11th day of May, 1799.

"Voted, Any creatures driven or found in the town of Cheseekooks that do not really and directly belong to an inhabitant of said town shall be dealt with in extraordinary manner.

"Voted, That the sum of five shillings per head be paid to the driver of chattle to the pound, one-half to go to the use of the poor and the other half to the said driver or impounder, to be received from the sale of said creatures according to the statute law in such cases of trespass.

"Voted, That James Webb be pound-master, and that a pound be built contiguous to his residence.

"Voted, That Eli Marvin be pound-master in the room of Charles Cunningham."

This question of outside cattle seems to have been a very important one, as another special meeting was held within a month to further arrange for more stringent rules and thorough protection. The fertile valleys of Monroe must have offered a strong temptation to the cattle of other towns, and it cost quite an effort to make owners or cattle, or both, understand the location of the town lines. The following is the record of the second special meeting:

"At a special town-meeting held by the inhabitants of the town of Cheseekooks, held at the house of John Weygant, on the 4th day of June, 1799.

"1st. Agreed by the majority and "Voted, That any horned cattle of any other person not belonging to the town of Cheesecooks shall not be commoners in said town.
"2d. Voted, That any inhabitant of any other town who has drove chattle into said town shall have free liberty and toleration to drive their chattle out of the bounds of said town at any time between now and the 12th day of June instant.
"3d. Voted, Any person or persons driving any chattle to any pound which has been or shall be erected within said town, and delivering them to the pound-master of said pound or pounds, said person or persons so driving and delivering to said pound-master, or pound-masters receiving them, the people of the town of Cheesecooks doth hereby bind themselves to defend them in all or every suit or suits which shall be brought against any of said driver or drivers, pound-master or pound-masters as aforesaid.
"4th. Voted, That cattle so impounded shall be dealt with according to the law passed at our last town-meeting."

The first road survey recorded was under date of Oct. 15, 1799, as follows :

"Beginning at the road between the house of Isaac Lamoreaux and the house of the Widow Prindle, where there are two maple-trees marked, and runs from thence near a peperage-tree marked standing near the line of Lamoreaux and Jones' lots, and from thence along, as there are saplings marked near the house of Moses Miller, to a white-oak sapling marked near the line betwixt the lands of Jones and Henry Wood, and from thence along the side hill, near Henry Wood's new house, on the northwest side, to the land of Jonathan Taylor to a chestnut sapling marked, and from thence on the most convenient ground through the commons till it intersects the main road near Nathaniel Taylor's house."

These road surveys mention so many names and localities throwing light upon early settlement we quote the second survey also :

"Beginning at a red-oak blazed sapling, where formerly stood the house called the Pendle House, on the road leading from James Webb's to Stirling furnace, on the land of said Webb, and from thence running through said Webb's land to the south side of Mombasha Pond to the land of Charles Webb ; and through the land of said Charles Webb, where are trees and saplings blazed to a pair of bars a few rods northwest of said Charles Webb's barn ; and from thence as is most direct to the land formerly in possession of Daniel Miller, deceased, now in possession of Capt. Abraham Miller ; and from thence running the most direct way to a chestnut-tree blazed northwest of the barn now in the possession of said Miller ; thence along the road commonly traveled by the possessors of said farm towards the stage road across the land formerly the property of Daniel Miller, deceased, to a chestnut sapling and oak sapling marked on the lands of John Nix ; thence across the lands of said Nix and the lands of Vincent Compton as the trees are blazed to the stage road, where there is a heap of stones a few rods southeast of the house of Vincent Compton."

In 1803 it was voted to build pounds at Adam Belcher's, Peter Lamoreaux's, John Weygant, Jr.'s, and Jacob Mandeville's, and twenty-five dollars was appropriated for building the four.

The same year $100 was voted for building bridges, provided they cannot be made a county charge.

Nov. 11, 1805, at a special town-meeting, John Coffey was chosen supervisor in the place of Moses Cunningham. There is no reason assigned, but Mr. Cunningham had probably died in office.

The following have been the principal town officers from 1799 to 1880 :

THE THREE TOWNS.

TOWN OF HIGHLANDS.—This must not in any manner be confounded with the present town of Highlands, which was erected in 1872 out of the territory of Cornwall. The Monroe Highlands was entirely a different organization. In the year 1863, for divers and sundry reasons supposed to be sufficient by the friends of the movement, an effort was instituted to divide the town of Monroe into three towns. The maps were duly made, petitions drawn, and the proposition laid before the board of supervisors of Orange County at their annual meeting. The effort was successful, and the board passed an act in due form, erecting out of the former territory of Monroe Highlands in the north, Monroe in the centre, and Southfield in the south.

The first town-meeting for Highlands was held at the house of Selah L. Lefferts, at about the usual time of town-meetings, in March, 1864. Smith Weygant presided, and the following town officers chosen. If this record is not precisely definite and accurate, it is a sufficient explanation that the records are not officially preserved, and the proceedings, as here detailed, are given on the recollections of various citizens, who are doubtless in the main correct, sustained also by memoranda in possession of Mr. Thomas Earle: Supervisor, Morgan Shuit;* Town Clerk, Isaac L. Noxon; Justices of the Peace, Morgan Shuit, Charles Lewis, Archibald Campbell; Overseers of the Poor, Daniel M. Lamoreux, John Wines; Inspectors of Election, Theodore Weyant, Alexander Campbell, Aaron H. Taylor; Assessors, Henry Thorn, James Wilkes, Samuel H. Brown; Constables, Sylvester R. Tuthill, Charles H. Earle.

The following path-masters were appointed for districts numbered in the order of the names: George F. Wilkes, Josiah Webb, Isaac Rider, William Shuit, Horace Hullson, James M. Ball, Charles T. Ford, Joshua T. Cromwell, King Rider, William H. Brooks, John Brooks, Lorenzo D. Weygant, William O'Neil, Gilbert Turner, John Coffey, Aaron Redner, Morgan Shuit, Thomas B. Hallock, Thomas H. Bates, Jacob Seaman, Charles Lewis, Charles Sutherland, Henry Thorn, Amos W. Sutherland, William Walsh, Jesse Brown, Isaac Clark, John Weygant, John Clark, Reuben Rice, James Weygant, Ebenezer Whitmarge, Jacob Bailey, William Van Tassel, James H. Lewis, John Ayres, James Miller.

TOWN OF MONROE.—The meeting was held March 22, 1864, at the house of Thomas Smith. This was the year of the division, when three towns had been erected out of old Monroe, viz.: Monroe, Southfield, and Highlands. Of course three town-meetings were held and three full sets of town officers were chosen.

Supervisor, Chauncey B. Knight; Town Clerk, Chauncey B. Newkirk; Assessors, Ira Jenkins, for three years; John K. Roe, for two years; Commissioners of Highways, Sanford S. Lewis, two years; George W. Thompson, one year; George Heaton, three years; Overseers of the Poor, William J. McElroy, Solomon W. Esray; Constables, Silas Gallo-way, Isaac M. Shuit, Jacob L. Redner; Inspectors of Election, James Smith, Peter Ball, James H. Bertholf; Justices of the Peace, Thomas R. Earle, three years; George K. Smith, four years.

The next town-meeting was to be held at Bayer's Hall. The town board presiding at this meeting were William Seaman, Thomas C. B. Smith, Elmore Earle, and Thomas R. Earle.

It was voted to have three highway commissioners, two overseers of the poor, and three constables; to have stone division fences four and one-half feet high, and rail fences five feet high. A full set of forty-five path-masters for the new town were appointed, in the order of districts as their names are given:

William G. Knight, Thomas Caren, Henry Woodruff, William V. Mapes, William Carpenter, Thomas Smith, Alfred Carpenter, Wait Pearsall, James Cromwell, Abram Tetts, George King, Peter Ball, S. S. Bull, H. H. Lawrence, Samuel King, J. K. Roe, S. Smith, W. J. McElroy, P. G. Lewis, G. H. Smith, Charles Post, J. M. Webb, John Mosure, Stephen Compton, Edward Jones, Thomas Lewis, A. S. Smith, George S. Jacques, William Clark, Elmore Earl, Peter Turner, Asabel Smith, T. C. B. Smith, J. R. Sutherland, J. R. Rider, John McGarrah, Charles Turner, Levi Hunter, J. H. Thompson, William R. Conklin, James H. Bull, Walter Garretson, Peter Earle, James Oldfield, Franklin Mapes.

TOWN OF SOUTHFIELD.—This town was organized by a town-meeting held pursuant to this act, as in the case of the other two towns. For some unexplained reasons the records of the town are not preserved in the office of the Monroe town clerk, as it would seem they ought to have been, after the reconstruction took place. The legality of this proceeding by officers chosen at this town-meeting of Southfield, may even yet be called in question, and yet there is no official record preserved of their election. Josiah Patterson was chosen supervisor, and represented Southfield in the board of supervisors that year. Of course one tax was levied and collected upon Southfield as a town by itself.

THE CONCLUSION.—Those who were opposed to the formation of these three towns petitioned the Legislature to reorganize the old town of Monroe. This movement was successful. The new towns of Highlands, Monroe, and Southfield were reunited by the Legislature of 1865, and in time so that the annual town-meeting in the spring of 1865 was for the whole town. The most noted reminiscence of the affair was that for some two years following there must have been eight or nine justices of the peace in the reconstructed town.

V.—VILLAGES.

MONROE

is a village having the same name as the town, situated on one of the head-waters of the Ramapo, the outlet of Round Pond. It is a station on the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railway.

The present business of the village comprises three hotels,—the Waubeck House, Theodore Mapes; one by Martin Konnight; and a third by another party. There are stores by Theodore McGarrah and by Montanye & Co.; a fancy store and millinery by Mrs. Griffin; a bakery by Nicholas Reed; a drug-store by Henry Mapes; a shoe-store by Edward C. Jones; blacksmith-shops by David Redner, Solomon Fairchild, Henry Rider, and a fourth by another proprietor; a feed-mill by Knight & Conklin; a grist-mill, owned by C. B. Knight; carriage-making and undertaking by Charles W. Mapes; also carriage-making by Henry Huhn; a hardware-store by J. H. Bertholf; and harness-making by J. S. Gregory.

* In the arrangement this veteran supervisor fell to Highlands, and it seemed the only proper thing to do to have him represent the new town. With his long experience he could save this delicate young enterprise from the perils that might environ it.

WOODBURY FALLS

is a hamlet in the north part of the town, on Woodbury Creek, taking its name from the falls in that stream, and formerly the seat of a furnace. The creek is the outlet of Hazzard Lake. A post-office was established here Aug. 11, 1874. Lewis A. Van Cleft was appointed postmaster, and retains the office at the present time. There is a store there, kept by the postmaster, Lewis A. Van Cleft.

SEAMANVILLE

is about one mile east of Monroe village, on the Erie Railway, and was formerly a station. There is now a grist-mill and cider-works, operated by Charles Turner. This is an interesting point of early settlement, and the location of the earliest Presbyterian meeting-house, as shown in the valuable article, given elsewhere, from the pen of the present pastor.

HIGHLAND MILLS POST-OFFICE.

This village has grown up around the mills established at this point and mentioned elsewhere. It is very near to Woodbury, and they might be supposed to constitute only one village. It was formerly known as Orange. Extensive mills were quite early erected at this place. The Townsend tannery, established many years ago, is now owned by J. T. Cromwell. The Townsend flour-mill of early times is still in the same family, and owned by Charles H. Townsend, operated by J. T. Cromwell. There is also a fish-line factory near the depot by Henry Hall & Sons, and two stores by J. T. Cromwell and Robert Pembleton. The post-office was established at this place, under the name of Orange, about 1828 or 1830. It was located on the old stage-route between New York and Albany. Mr. Vail was postmaster "so long back as memory or tradition goes" (says our informant). He was succeeded by Peter Lent about 1844 or 1845. A few years later Morgan Shuit followed Mr. Lent, and held the office until May 24, 1872, when C. H. Townsend, the present incumbent, was appointed. There is a shoe-store by James P. Lent.

CENTRAL VALLEY

is another of the small villages that have grown up through various business enterprises in the valleys of the Ramapo and of Woodbury Creek. It is the third in order from the north line of the town. A post-office was established here Dec. 27, 1871. Alfred Cooper was appointed postmaster, and has held the office until the present time. There is a store by Alfred Cooper, and a carriage manufactory by Robert F. Weyant. There is a public hall, known as Institute Hall, for meetings, lectures, etc. This place is a noted summer resort. There is a boarding-house by Isaac L. Noxon. The Cornell School and Boarding Building is also there. There is also the Summit Lake House, by Elisha Stockbridge, in the mountains about two miles from Central Valley.

GREENWOOD LAKE.

A post-office was established under this name in July, 1876. L. Y. Jenness was appointed postmaster. He resigned, and John B. Bradner was appointed, Oct. 11, 1877, and retains the office at the present time. This is a summer resort of note, and guests are received by Lyden Y. Jenness, by the Brandon House, and by others.

is a station on the Erie Railroad, next east or south-east of Monroe. It has also a post-office. It was formerly known as Centreville, from the fact of several roads intersecting at that point, and considerable business and local trade centring there. The village has its present name in honor of Mr. Peter Turner, a citizen who did much to advance the prosperity and growth of the place, and to whose estate a large portion of the business part of the place belonged. The present business of Turner's consists of one hotel by Charles Ford, formerly the well-known Turner House, and a railroad eating-house by James G. Turner; stores by Thomas R. Earl, James Cronon, David M. Hollenbeck; a grist-mill for custom-work, run by Mr. Legg; blacksmith-shops by Jesse Sullivan and by John Coffey, and carriage-making by John Coffey. The large and handsome eating-room and depot of the Erie Company, now in ruins, was built by a firm (Peter Turner and Mr. Blaisdell, from Boston), and afterwards bought by the railway company. It was burned the night before Christmas, in 1872. It has never been rebuilt, and is now a picturesque ruin, with trees growing up in it, the habitation of sparrows, and only needs the clinging ivy to give it the classic air of English scenery.

The grist-mill mentioned above was first established just below the dam, on the north side, and a saw-mill on the south side, at a very early day. John Earl was the proprietor for many years, and afterwards sold to Peter Turner. The latter erected the present mill some distance below, the water being supplied from the old pond through a race.

There was also in early times a forge at this place, but long since given up.

QUEENSBOROUGH

is the rather ambitious name bestowed upon a neighborhood lying in the valley of the southern branch of Poplopen's Creek. There is some mining in this vicinity, and an acid manufactory by Wm. Knight, the acid being extracted from wood for coloring purposes.

GREENWOOD IRON-WORKS.

This name naturally attaches to the village which has grown up in connection with the manufacturing operations at this point. There is one store, kept here by the company, and there is little other business except as connected with the iron-works and carried on by the company.

SOUTHFIELD

was the name of the locality of the "Southfield Works" and the "Monroe Works." These enterprises are on the Ramapo River, somewhat south of the centre of the town, and upon the Erie Railway. They were established about 1805 or 1806 to make pig-iron. The early proprietors were William Townsend and Peter Townsend. Peter Townsend, a son of the founder of the same name, has a summer residence at Southfield. There is a hotel, kept by John Speller; a shoddy manufactory, also by John Speller; one store by Charles Patterson, a mile below the works; a store by John Speller; and a store by the Southfield Iron Company.

There is a large summer boarding-house on the well-known Coffey place.

HELMENBURGH

is the name formerly bestowed upon a neighborhood south of Mombasha Lake, and west of Southfield. It is merely a rural mountain neighborhood, sometimes called Bramertown, with much fine scenery and many secluded retreats.

AUGUSTA

is a station upon the Erie Railway in the south part of the town, and the seat of the old Augusta Works. These were founded just at the close of the Revolution, 1783-84, by Solomon Townsend, of the city of New York, to make bar-iron and anchors. It was an important enterprise, but was not permanently successful. In later years the works passed to the ownership of Peter Lorillard, who allowed them to remain idle. 13,000 acres of land were attached to the works. The hydraulic power is second only to that of Paterson, N. J.

There is a perpendicular fall in the Ramapo of twenty feet, and within half a mile below the stream falls seventy-five feet more. The works have never been rebuilt, and there is but little business at that point, only one train calling each way daily. On this old Augusta tract is the beautiful and renowned Truxedo Lake.

EAGLE VALLEY

is a station upon the Erie Railway, in the extreme southwestern angle of the town, and near the New Jersey line. There is now one store there kept by J. T. Pembleton. The place is about half way from Sloatsburgh to the Stirling Iron-Works.

OTHER LOCALITIES

of special name may be mentioned, as "Wild-Cat Hollow," in the valley of the Indian Kill; "Parker Cabin Hollow," near Car Pond. The various mines, "Scott Mines," "Cook Mines," "Stirling Mines," "Bradley Mines," "Forest of Dean Mines," "Dump," "O'Neil Mines," "Mount Basha Mines," "Clove Mine," "Beering Mines," "Redback Mines," "Crawford Mines," "Coal Shier Mines," etc.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

But little information is at hand concerning the schools before the Revolutionary war, nor for some years following that period. Under the old law of 1795 the town elected school commissioners in 1799, as shown in the records of the first town-meeting already given. In 1800 commissioners were also elected, viz.: James D. Secor, Joseph Stevens, and Adam Belcher. No further town action was taken under this law.

At the town-meeting of 1813, in accordance with the provisions of the new school act of 1813, $200 was appropriated for the support of schools, and commissioners were chosen. This system continued until 1843, and during that period of thirty years the following persons served one or more years each in the office of school commissioner: Elijah Randolph, Joseph R. Andrews, Samuel Webb, James Cromwell, Benjamin Cunningham, Michael Gough, John Coffey, Lewis H. Roe, Jonas King, Israel Green, George Wilkes, William Vail, Jr., Stephen Griffin, Stephen Coleman, Charles Townsend, John McGarrah, Matthew B. Swezey, John Brooks, Jr., David W. McCulloch, Alexander Galloway, Matthias C. Woodruff, Ethan B. Carpenter, Gates W. McGarrah, John Brooks, Jr., Archibald Campbell, David Mapes, Smith Weygant, John Lamont.

During the same period the following persons served one or more years each as inspectors of common schools: Joseph R. Andrews, Joseph Jefferson, James Cromwell, Jr., Peter Dean, Joseph Howgan, John Coffey, George Wilkes, Elijah Randolph, William Jackson, Elijah, Randall, Timothy Keys, Lewis H. Roe, Michael Gough, Bryant Garrahan, John McGarrah, Samuel Van Duzer, Benjamin Cunningham, Israel Green, William Vail, Jr., James Weygant, John Brooks, Jr., John Hazard, Stephen Griffin, Matthew B. Swezey, George W. Gough, Charles Townsend, Richard Murphy, David W. McCulloch, Ethan B. Carpenter, Stephen McDonald, Michael Dickerman, Nathan T. Thorn, Hiram S. Dains, Thomas G. Wilkes, Smith Weygant, Joseph M. Shuit, Charles F. Ford, Joshua T. Cromwell, James B. Smith, Samuel Smith, James B. Smith, John K. Smith, Roe C. Pilgrim, John C. Boyd, Jeremiah H. Thompson.

The system of supervision by four superintendents having succeeded the former method, the following were the incumbents of that office in Monroe. Chosen at annual elections: 1843-45, Morgan Shuit; 1846-47, Archibald Campbell. Chosen at biennial elections: 1848-56, Archibald Campbell. This system was succeeded in June, 1856, by Assembly district commissioners, and management of the schools by the town entirely ceased.

May 27, 1813, the school commissioners divided the town into fourteen school districts.

There is a school report for 1819 in the town clerk's office which shows something of the school sixty years ago.

District No. 1 then had 80 children between five and sixteen, and received of public money $1661; No. 2, 82 children and $1515; No. 4, 84 children and $1552; No. 6, 104 children and $1917; No. 7, 137 children and $2530; No. 8, 83 children and $1533; No. 9, 82 children and $1515; No. 10, 45 children and $813; No. 12, 45 children and $880; No. 11, 62 children and $1147.

There is a classical school near Central Valley known as Cornell Institute. It is a boarding- and day-school for young ladies and gentlemen, David Cornell, principal.

VII.—CHURCHES.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION OF SMITH CLOVE was incorporated by a certificate executed Oct. 9, 1788. The paper was signed by Archibald Cunningham and William Miller, Jr., deacons of the congregation, and the trustees named in the instrument were Archibald Cunningham, William Miller, Jr., George Brown, Timothy Smith, Aaron Miller, and Morris Pilgrim.

We are indebted to the courtesy of the pastor, D. N. Freeland, for the following sketch of this church:

Provision was made for religious worship in this vicinity by the proprietors of the Chesebrough Patent as early as 1735, when the lands conveyed by said patent were surveyed by Charles Clinton, Esq. He entered lot 24 of 150 acres as "a choice, good lot" suitable for a parsonage. This is the land now occupied by Peter Bush. As the whole region was stony and less inviting than some other portions of the county, population was slow in entering and taking up the land, and when they entered they were poor and unable to set up any institution beyond those of the home. It was as late as 1783 before we read of any minister of Christ turning his attention to this region, and then Silas Constant, a licentiate under the care of Morris Presbytery, came to Blooming-Grove, and April 20th preached his first sermon at Blooming-Grove. He was ordained May 29, 1784. In his journal he mentions Smith's Clove, or Monroe, as one of his preaching-stations. Probably as early as 1783 he visited the Clove. The first sermon he delivered here was in the presence of a congregation assembled in an orchard belonging to the Fowler farm, and under an apple-tree which is still standing and brings forth fruit in old age. The apple is large and delicious, and is called the Presbyterian apple. Thus it can be said of the church whose nucleus was gathered there, "I raised thee up under the apple-tree: there thy mother brought thee forth." It was not long after the attention of the people was called to the subject of religion they rose up to build. They felt the need of a place of worship, and took steps towards the rearing of a house of God. The land was given by Daniel Miller, consisting of two acres, situated in what was afterwards called Seamanville, near the mill he owned there. Here a house of worship was erected in the midst of a grove of forest-trees. It is a tradition well verified that the church was raised the day that Elizabeth Clark, afterwards wife of Stephen Bull, was born. The family Bible records that "she was born 5th month, 28th day, 1783."

After the frame was raised and the building inclosed the sturdy yeomen arrested their work, their funds probably having failed them, and for many years the congregation sat upon the sills and girders while the minister preached from the carpenter's bench. Still there was no regularly organized congregation. In 1784 the Legislature passed an act granting liberty of worship and regulating the organization of congregations. Under this act, on May 17, 1784, persons desiring to be incorporated into a church met at the house of Mr. Bell, in the Bakertown neighborhood. The ministers officiating were Rev. Silas Constant and Rev. Amzi Lewis, the latter pastor of the church of Florida. It is recorded in Mr. Constant's journal; "After prayer and the necessary examination, and the particular personal professions of union and Christian fellowship, proceeded to lead them into visible covenant with each other in the presence of God and before the world, and solemnly pronounce them a visible church of Christ. The church then took into consideration the choice of deacons, and after solemn exhortation and prayer, made choice of Archibald Cunningham and William Miller, Jr., to fill that office. They accepted. The church then agreed to have a stated meeting monthly for business, conversation, and prayer." The names of some of the persons who first composed the church are the following: Archibald Cunningham and wife, William Miller, Jr., and wife, John Miller and wife, Thos. Davenport and wife, Samuel Hall and wife, James Lewis and wife, Jane Bell, the wife of Timothy Smith, and the wife of Alexander Archer. It was called the First Presbyterian Congregation of Cheesecocks.*

The records of the congregation are very meagre in its early periods of existence, and the history has to be constructed from fragments and traditions received from varied sources.

The successor to Rev. Silas Constant was Rev. David Baldwin, who served the church four years. His wife died Sept. 16, 1800, in the fifty-sixth year of her age. When his pastorate began and ended we are unable to ascertain.

Dec. 25, 1801, the church was formally incorporated. The first trustees were Samuel Gregory, Gilbert King, Charles Webb, George Fowler, James Smith, and Isaac Bull.

The third minister in the succession was probably

Simeon R. Jones, who served this church, jointly with that of Chester, from 1800 to 1804. He died March 13, 1857.

The fourth minister was Rev. Howell Powell, a Welshman. While he labored here the trustees met for the purpose of procuring a convenient and commodious house and place for him to live in, and then agreed to lease lot 24, of 150 acres, in Cheesecocks Patent, to A. Gates White, said lease to be as durable as wood grows and water runs, for the sum of one-tenth part of a cent yearly if demanded; the said White to convey unto the said trustees by a warranty deed the place he now lives on and occupies on the east side of the stage road, containing about 58 acres of land, and also to give to the said trustees £200 one year without interest, then interest annually until paid. This was the farm afterwards owned by John Brooks where stands the Granite House.

The fifth minister who served this congregation was Rev. Mr. Porter, of whom we have no records or tradition except that he served them eighteen months.

The sixth was Rev. J. H. Thomas. He was ordained and installed at Chester, Oct. 12, 1814, where he was engaged for three-quarters of his time. For the remainder he served this congregation at least two years. A few fragmentary minutes now come to hand. They bear date of 1814 and 1815. One of these records a resolution that S. Hutchins be their second deacon. Samuel Gregory was the first.

The seventh minister in order was Rev. Hosea Ball. He was born at Townsend, Mass., studied theology with Rev. Silas Constant, taken under care of Westchester Presbytery, and came to Monroe, Oct. 20, 1818. He was licensed April 11, 1821, and ordained the same year. During Mr. Ball's labors the church was considerably revived and increased in membership.

In 1819 a Sabbath-school was organized. About this time the church lost its incorporation. Its charter was renewed Jan. 23, 1822. William Vail, Jr., Samuel Gregory, Andrew Vanraler, Samuel Webb, Lewis H. Roe, and John McGarrah were chosen trustees. Just previous to this time the church building was made more comfortable by introducing square pews, pulpit, and gallery.

Rev. John White succeeded Mr. Ball, who ceased his labors here in 1823; but returned to reside here till 1876, when he died aged eighty-four years. Mr. White seems to have succeeded in harmonizing the people, laboring with them till Sept. 22, 1824, when he returned to England.

About this time the glebe on the stage road was exchanged for another piece of land containing some 35 acres, with a house situate east-northeast of the present village, and was occupied by Rev. Mr. White and other ministers.

Rev. John Boyd succeeded him, coming to Monroe Aug. 26, 1826. June 2, 1828, the congregation resolved to transfer their ecclesiastical relation from the Associated Presbytery of Westchester to the Presbytery of Hudson. This having been effected, the session consisted of Elders Andrew Van Valu, Benjamin C. Smith. In 1831, George Milton Newman and Samuel V. Carpenter were elected elders. Rev. Mr. Boyd served the church as their stated supply some eight or nine years, when increasing infirmities laid him aside from active labors. He died Jan. 14, 1842, aged eighty.

Rev. John Jay Thompson was his successor. His first official record is dated Dec. 24, 1836. During his ministry a new manse was erected, and numerous accessions were gathered to the church. He closed his labors in this field in 1847, and died at Bloomingburgh, N. Y., June 12, 1849. He was succeeded by Rev. Daniel M. Freeland, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Philadelphia. He was invited to entertain a call Nov. 16, 1847, and was ordained and installed March 7, 1848.

A new church was erected and dedicated Feb. 15, 1853. The glebe was sold in 1867, and a new lot purchased in the village and a manse erected upon it, which was occupied in November, 1867. In May, 1873, a bell was presented to the church by Lewis H. Roe, son of Genest M. Roe, M.D., an elder of this church, and was hung in the belfry. The pastoral relation between Mr. Freeland and the congregation was dissolved by mutual consent Sept. 16, 1873, and on the 18th of October a call was renewed for his pastoral services, and May 15, 1874, he was reinstalled. During this pastorate the following have filled the office of ruling elder, namely: Andrew Van Valu, Genest M. Roe, John K. Roe, David Smith, John Taylor, J. Warren Helm, Joseph W. Youngs, Samuel C. Van Vliet, Jr. Of these the first has held the office nearly seventy-five years, and has reached his ninety-fourth year. Messrs. Taylor, Youngs, and Van Vliet are the present acting Session. The present trustees are Messrs. G. T. Smith, Isaac Thompson, Horace B. Swezey, Joseph W. Youngs, S. C. Van Vliet, Jr. Chauncey B. Knight, the chairman, has recently been removed by death. At the beginning of this pastorate there were 54 members, and during thirty-two years of labor the additions have been 131, but removals and deaths keep the membership at about 100. Through these years of vicissitudes the congregation has been enabled to improve its buildings without incurring a debt for any length of time, to decide important issues without serious disagreement, to sustain the institutions of the gospel, and aid by its contributions many benevolent enterprises of the day.

FRIENDS' MEETINGS.

Joshua T. Cromwell furnishes the following items: The Society of Friends have a meeting-house in Cornwall, built before 1788, and it was the only meeting-house or church in the town till about 1825. Friends' meeting-house in the town of Newburgh was built in 1795; the meeting-house at Smith's Clove, near Highland Mills, in Monroe, was built in 1799; and the one near Monroe, in the town of Blooming-Grove, was built in 1815.

After the separation of the society in 1828, part of the society built a meeting-house north of the village of Canterbury, in Cornwall, and also a meeting-house one and a half miles easterly of Highland Mills, in Monroe. These are all now occupied by the society, and are all the houses they have in the county. Among the Friends at Cornwall in 1788-90, the more prominent names were David Sands, Gardiner Earle, William Titus, Nicholas Townsend, and Langford Thorn.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.*

The first Methodist Episcopal Church in Monroe was organized and duly incorporated May 2, 1829. The article of incorporation was executed by E. L. Pelham and Francis Weygant. The first church edifice was erected soon after at Highland Mills, and the first board of trustees consisted of Rev. Francis Weygant, Rev. Nathaniel Sackett, John D. Conklin, Henry Wisner, Isaac Still, Benjamin Delamater, Elias Fancher, Jabez Atwood, Andrew Shorter. Ten years after, in 1839, a new society was organized in the village of Monroe, and a certificate of incorporation executed by Thomas Newman and E. B. Carpenter. The trustees chosen were Samuel Smith, Peter Ball, Stephen Post, Jeremiah Knight, Isaac Couston, John King, Thomas D. Tannery. The church was erected in 1841, during the pastorate of Revs. Eli Denniston and Sylvester S. Strong.

The two churches until 1866 were united in one charge, and were successively served by the following ministers: Revs. John G. Smith, David Buck, A. C. Fields, T. Newman, J. H. Hawkshurst, Jeremiah Millard, David B. Turner, William Blake, Joel Croft, M. M. Curtis, Uriah Messiter. In 1866 the charge was divided, and Highland Mills and Monroe village each became separate pastorates. Since then the ministers appointed successively to the two charges respectively have been as follows: Monroe village, Revs. D. D. Gillespie, J. W. B. Wood, R. M. Roberts. During the latter's pastorate a new church was erected at Turner's, costing $4000, and added to the Monroe charge. Mr. Roberts was succeeded by Rev. D. McCartney, during whose incumbency the church at Monroe was enlarged and entirely refurnished, lecture- and class-rooms and tower built, and a bell purchased, the whole costing over $5000. At the close of Mr. McCartney's term of three years, Rev. Z. N. Lewis was appointed to succeed him. He remained two years, and was followed by the present pastor, Rev. G. Hearn.

At Highland Mills the pastors successively appointed since 1866 are Revs. R. L. Shurter, R. L. Roberts, J. W. B. Wood, J. H. Champion, E. E. Pinney, W. Ostrander, the last being the present pastor. The official members of the two churches during the time included in the above statement have been as follows: David Bull, Hiram Tuthill, Matthew B. Swezey, Nathan Strong, Smith Weygant, B. G. Tuthill, Peter Ball, John A. Boyce, John T. Brown, Valentine Seaman, Dr. S. W. Esray, Samuel Cooley, Walter Roberts, Charles T. Ford, Sr., Josiah Stevens, H. H. Lawrence, Franklin Bull, Charles T. Ford, Jr., and Elisha Stevens, each of whom have filled one or more of the offices of local preacher, exhorter, steward, class-leader, or Sunday-school superintendent, and many of them have died after having served the church with great fidelity for many years.

In 1848 the Southfield Methodist Episcopal Church at Monroe Works was organized and duly incorporated by John P. Hermance and Robert Ashman. A church edifice was erected the same year. The board of trustees consisted of Robert Ashman, Hudson McFarlan, Peter Townsend, Jr., Peter B. Bush, Charles T. Ford, Michael Shultz, and Robert Ketchum. The church has never been pastorally connected with the Monroe charge, but has had ministers of its own successively appointed down to the present time. It is at present a part of the Sloatsburgh charge, of which Rev. Nelson Brusie is pastor.

June 23, 1855, a Methodist Protestant society was organized at Salem, near the Little Long Pond, in the town of Monroe. The proceedings were signed by Rev. Joshua Burch and William Fitzgerald, a building was erected, and the following trustees chosen: Albert Roe, Charles Fitzgerald, Daniel Stevens, and Sylvanus Roberts. The church is at present supplied by Rev. Mr. Wetzel, and a flourishing union Sabbath-school is connected with it.

The present estimated value of church property, including parsonages, is as follows: Monroe village and Turner's, $7000; Highland Mills, $5000; Southfield (no parsonage), $1000. Membership: Monroe village and Turner's, 225; Highland Mills, 140; Southfield, 50.

The present officers of the several churches are as follows:

Monroe.—Trustees, Walter Roberts, John S. Bull, H. H. Lawrence, John S. Gregory, James Smith, Charles S. Strong, William Ball; Stewards, B. G. Tuthill, F. Bull, H. H. Lawrence, Lester Gregory, William Ball, T. B. Millspaugh, W. Roberts; Leaders, B. G. Tuthill, F. Bull, W. Roberts; Sabbath-school Superintendent, Franklin Bull.

Turner's.—Trustees, J. T. Brown, C. T. Ford, Jr., T. R. Earle, Peter B. Bush, Sanford S. Lewis, J. G. Rider, Alfred Cooper; Stewards, C. T. Ford, Jr., Sanford S. Lewis; Leader, C. T. Ford, Jr.; Sabbath-school Superintendent, Archibald Millspaugh.

Southfield.—Trustees, Peter Townsend, J. S. Ford, William McElroy, H. Fletcher, Gilbert Horton; Stewards, William McElroy, Gilbert Horton; Leader, Gilbert Horton; Sunday-school Superintendent, Gilbert Horton.

* Prepared by the pastor of Monroe Church, Rev. G. Hearn.

Highland Mills.—Trustees, Henry Hall, Sr., Charles T. Ford, Sr., Henry Thorn, Stephen Dickens, William Birdsall, William Taylor, H. N. Green, Theodore Weygant, J. H. Weygant; Stewards, Charles T. Ford, Sr., Benjamin Ford, Henry Thorn, William Taylor, James W. Campbell, H. N. Green, Theodore Weygant, N. C. Earle, George W. Green; Sunday-school Superintendent, James W. Campbell.

In 1879, Mrs. Elizabeth Bates purchased a building at Central Valley, made the necessary alterations to fit it for a place of worship, and donated it to the Methodist Episcopal Church. It is included in the pastorate of Highland Mills. Its officers are as follows:

Trustees, R. F. Weygant, F. S. Weygant, I. L. Noxon, James W. Campbell, George W. Green, Alfred Cooper, Milton Pembleton; Sunday-school Superintendent, George W. Green.

ST. JOHN'S FREE CHURCH (EPISCOPAL), GREENWOOD, executed a certificate of incorporation July 13, 1863. It was signed by the associated incorporators, viz.: Robert P. Parrott, Peter P. Parrott, John Campbell, John G. Davison, Robert M. F. Cole, William H. Wilson, Charles Babcock. The pastor, Rev. Samuel Moran, furnishes the following notes:

Church services were first held at Greenwood in 1852, and from that time until 1862 missionaries held regular worship. In November, 1862, the Rev. Charles Babcock began to hold regular Sunday services. In March, 1863, Greenwood was made a missionary station by the missionary committee of the diocese, and the Rev. Mr. Babcock was appointed missionary. July 7, 1863, the corner-stone of the church building was laid by the Rt. Rev. Horatio Potter, D.D., LL.D., bishop of the diocese of New York. During the summer and fall of 1866 the parish school building was erected. The parish school was opened Oct. 25, 1866. Mr. Babcock resigned the rectorship of the parish Oct. 11, 1871. He was succeeded by the Rev. John F. Potter, who ministered here until Sept. 1, 1874. On Nov. 22, 1874, the Rev. Samuel Moran took charge of the parish, but was not elected as rector until March 29, 1875; and on the same day was elected trustee to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Potter. Mr. Moran resigned the rectorship in February, 1876. Services were continued regularly by the Rev. Mr. Whipple and others. Mr. Moran was called in April, 1879, to the position of officiating minister, and at the present time of writing is in charge of the parish. Our Sunday services are very well attended, especially in the summer-time. We have a Sunday-school numbering 50 scholars and 5 teachers. God has blessed the work of the missionaries in these mountains, and many people have been brought into the fold of Christ by their faithful ministrations. At present the number of communicants is about 60.

GRACE CHURCH.*

This church was incorporated under the free church law, March 6, 1871, the incorporators being Charles Babcock, Henry A. Dows, John G. Davison, N. D. Woodhull, Charles Ford, and L. G. Tillotson.

The services of the Protestant Episcopal Church were first held regularly in Monroe in the summer of 1868. The names of the original members of this parish are John G. Davison, Mrs. Sarah A. Davison, Miss Dora A. Davison, William G. Parks, Miss Mary C. Parks, Miss Sarah Parks, Francis C. Conklin, Mrs. Martha J. Conklin, Mrs. Mary Stockweather, Mrs. Helen A. Clark, Miss Phebe A. Lewis, Charles Ford, Mrs. Mary C. Ford, Daniel Hawkins, Mrs. Louisa Hawkins, Mrs. Catharine Beach, Mrs. Rebecca Eglinger, and John Beeres.

The church building was erected at the cost of about $1600 in 1868 and 1869, and services have been held in it from the latter year up to the present time. It has sittings for about sixty persons, and there is sufficient land attached to it to allow for the future growth of the parish. In 1871 a tower was built, and a bell was put in place.

This parish owes its existence to the faithful efforts of the Rev. Charles Babcock, formerly rector of St. John's Church, Greenwood Iron-Works, now professor of architecture in Cornell University. In the spring of 1871, Mr. Babcock was succeeded in the charge of the church at Monroe by the Rev. Henry A. Dows. Mr. Dows was succeeded by the Rev. George A. Chambers (at that time a candidate for holy orders) in the fall of 1872, but resumed the rectorship on the 1st of October, 1874, continuing in charge up to the present time.

There are two Sunday-schools in the parish, the one holding its sessions in the church on Sunday afternoons, and the other assembling on Sunday mornings in the school-house at Satterlytown, about two miles north of Monroe. The former Sunday-school has been in existence since the early days of the church, the latter for between three and four years. The names of 46 children are on the rolls of the two schools, with 8 teachers. Services have been held nearly every summer during the last nine years in the Seven Springs Mountain House, near Monroe.

The board of trustees now consists of Charles Babcock, F. C. Conklin, Charles Ford, and L. G. Tillotson. Two vacancies in the board have been caused by resignations, and the president, Mr. Woodhull, has lately died. There are now 28 communicants in the parish.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

Commencing in the northern part of the town to trace the places of burial, we notice first the cemetery

* By Rev. Henry A. Dows.

at Highland Mills. This is probably fifty or sixty years old.

There is also a burial-place a short distance east of Monroe, near the line of the Erie Railroad, at Seamanville, at the site of the old Presbyterian church. It is undoubtedly one of the oldest in the town.

Next should be mentioned the cemetery south of Monroe village. This is a new enterprise, on the road from Monroe to Turner's.

At Turner's village there is also a burial-place, known as the McKelvey burial-ground. There are also private burial-places on the farms of G. M. Clark, Isaac H. Thompson, James Wilkes, and on the DeWitt place. In other parts of the town are private burial-places,—on the farms of Micah Dickerman, Elizabeth Gigneaux, David Webb, near Momhasha Pond (considerably in use by the public), Nathaniel Earle, and James Cromwell.

IX.—SOCIETIES, LIBRARIES, INCORPORATIONS, Etc.

Although one of the earliest Masonic lodges in the county was located in Monroe, there are no lodges of Masons, Odd-Fellows, or other similar organizations in town. There have been a number of temperance societies from time to time doing something to mould and develop public sentiment, but they have left little or no material for the historian to glean. The same remark may be made as to various church, missionary, literary, or benevolent societies.

THE MONROE LIBRARY ASSOCIATION was founded Nov. 12, 1834. The trustees named in the certificate were Matthias C. Woodruff, Ethan B. Carpenter, Matthew B. Swezey, William Stewart, Jeremiah Knight, Richard W. Woodhull, Hiram Tuthill, John Brooks, Jr., and Gates W. McGarrah. This seems to have been an attempt to establish a public library at Monroe village, but there is little recollection of it remaining in that vicinity, and it is probable the movement only attained vitality enough to become incorporated.

THE FOREST OF DEAN IRON COMPANY was incorporated by a certificate verified Nov. 25, 1864. The capital was stated at $1,500,000, divided into shares of $100 each. The parties named were George H. Potts, Frederick A. Potts, Charles C. Alger, Charles Alger, John Ten Broeck.

THE STIRLING IRON AND RAILWAY COMPANY

filed their annual report Jan. 17, 1865. It was signed by J. B. Moorhead, president, and O. D. T. Grant, David Crawford, Jr., C. W. Durant, trustees. The capital was reported $2,300,000. No part of the capital had been paid in money, but on the organization of the company they purchased mines, manufactories, and other property in Orange and Rockland Counties, and issued therefor the entire capital stock. The existing debt was reported at $953,121.58, for which the company held valid improvements.

THE FOREST OF DEAN IRON-ORE COMPANY

executed a certificate of incorporation under date of Oct. 12, 1865. The capital stock was fixed at $400,000, divided into 4000 shares of $100 each. The principal place of business was declared to be the town of Monroe. The trustees named for the first year were Edward Beck, John A. Griswold, Albert Town, and J. B. Brinsmade. The objects were stated to be "mining of iron ores, preparing them for market, and transporting, selling, and delivering the same." This is a valuable enterprise, and large quantities of ore are taken out.

THE GREENWOOD LAKE ASSOCIATION

executed a legal certificate of organization July 27, 1877. The trustees named were Cornelius Olcott, Albert Daggett, Remington Vernon, Henry C. Cooke, and Albert S. Roe. The objects of the association were stated in the instrument as follows:

"The preservation, importation, breeding, and propagating of all game, animals, birds, and fishes adapted to the climate; the affording facilities for hunting, shooting, and fishing on the grounds thereof by the members of, or by persons licensed by said corporation; supplying the spawn of fish or young fish, game, animals, or birds to other associations or persons; selling such surplus game, animals, birds, or fish as may be killed, caught, or taken on its property; cultivating forests, and providing its incorporation and others with an agreeable resort, with a respectable hotel or club house, cottage houses, stables, and anything necessary or proper for such accommodations."

THE FARMERS' CREAMERY ASSOCIATION OF TURNER'S effected a legal organization Feb. 23, 1880. The first trustees named were James Wilkes, George D. Peckham, William J. Post, Joseph Rake, and Isaac H. Thompson. The objects were declared to be as follows: "To make up or dispose of a surplus of milk whenever there shall be a flush of milk, or whenever, in the opinion of the trustees, it shall be for the interest of the association to do so." The capital stock was made to consist of $8000. This association began business in the spring of 1879, but deferred their incorporation to the above date. It is said to be doing an excellent business, the officers remaining the same at the present writing as stated above.

THE PARROTT IRON COMPANY

was formed by a certificate verified June 28, 1880, and recorded the same day in the office of the county clerk. The objects are stated to be "mining and selling of iron ore, limestone, or other minerals; the manufacturing of pig-iron, iron, or steel; and the making of patent mineral wool." The capital stock of said company was stated at $500,000, to be divided into 5000 shares. The trustees named in the instrument were Peter P. Parrott, Edward M. Parrott, Richard D. A. Parrott.

X.—PLACES OF HISTORIC INTEREST.

The numerous ponds mentioned under the head of Natural Features, the streams and mountain-gorges, are many of them of rare interest. Besides the charms of wild scenery, they are in many instances invested with the attraction of early legends or romance. Here were the hiding-places of Claudius Smith and his associates; the places where one or more men were killed who fell victims to his malice; or where some upon his side perished by the hand of the avenging freeman. The birth-place of Claudius is given by local tradition, though the accounts differ somewhat. The early mining operations and the forges of so ancient a date in some parts of the town are all matters worthy of note.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

Monroe has considerable area favorable to agriculture. Many valuable farms are found in the long valley extending through the town from north to south. Besides these arable lands there are many of the higher lands adapted to pasturage. The production of milk and dairy products generally makes in the aggregate an amount of considerable importance. Statistics of the agriculture are not given, because those of the last census are now of so little value in showing present conditions, and those of the new census will not be compiled so as to be accessible to the people for one or two years. The products of the forest—lumber, firewood, hoop-poles, and timber—have formed an industry of considerable value at times. Quite a portion of the town is too mountainous and rocky to be available in industrial pursuits of any kind.

STIRLING FURNACE.

This is on the outlet of Stirling Pond, and the oldest iron-works in the county, having been in operation near one hundred and fifty years. They were established by a London company, of which Lord Stirling, of New Jersey, was a member, and sold them the land, and hence the name. The pond is in Monroe, but the outlet soon runs into Warwick, and therefore it is that the furnace department is in that, and the anchor in the town of Warwick. There are 20,000 acres of land attached to this and the Southfield works, which supply them with iron and coal. They are owned by the Messrs. Townsend. At the early establishment of this furnace the charcoal used was transported several miles on the backs of horses from the mountains where it was burned, there being no roads at the time. The furnace was first erected by Ward & Colton in 1751, the forge in 1752, by Abel Noble, of Pennsylvania. The first anchor made in the State was manufactured here in 1753. Steel was first made here in 1776 by the late Peter Townsend, the grandfather of the younger Peter Townsend.* In 1810 his son, Peter Townsend, made blister-steel. After Fort Montgomery was taken, and the chain which was passed across the river there broken by the English ships which then ascended the river and burnt Kingston, the government still thinking that the river could be obstructed by a chain, sent Mr. Pickering, then secretary of war, to consult Mr. Townsend on the subject. When matters were agreed upon, they left Gray Court on Sunday in the midst of a violent snow-storm to go to New Windsor, and from there to West Point, to inspect the locality and fix the points from which and to which the chain was to be extended. The links were made of bar-iron, near two inches square, each weighing from 140 to 150 pounds. The whole chain weighed 186 tons, and was made and delivered in six weeks. The fires of the furnace were not extinguished in that time. The iron was made of equal parts of Stirling and Long Mine ores. The chain was made in pieces, thus: ten links were fastened together in the usual manner at the forge, and the eleventh link left open at one end like an ox-bow, with holes through the ends for a bolt to unite that link with the next one. These composed one load, which was taken to New Windsor by oxen and carts, where they were put together. Some of the links are preserved at West Point. It was stretched from the north side of the Point, on the west side, to Constitution Island, on the east side of the river.†

FOREST OF DEAN FURNACE.

This was on the Forest of Dean Creek, and on a patent of that name five miles west from Fort Montgomery and on a bed of iron ore. This furnace was an old affair, founded before the Revolution. Mr. Eager relates that when Fort Montgomery was taken, in 1777, this furnace made 21 blasts, and the fires were not lit up afterwards. It was apprehended that the close proximity of the English would make the works too hot even for the casting of pig-iron, and the owners extinguished the fires. No works under this name are now in operation.

QUEENSBOROUGH FURNACE.

This was in the northeast angle of the town, at the junction of Queensborough and Forest of Dean Creeks, two and a half miles southwest from Fort Montgomery. It was erected to make pig-iron. The works were suspended about the time of the war of 1812. No works under this name are now in operation.

THE GREENWOOD FURNACE.

This is in the central part of the town, on the outlet of Slaughter's Pond, near the Ramapo. It was originally called Orange Furnace, and was established in 1811-12 by the Messrs. Cunningham to make pig-iron. Mr. R. P. Parrot was a subsequent owner. It is now owned by Mr. P. P. Parrot. The buildings are rather picturesquely situated in a sheltered nook among the hills.

* See Biographical Sketch, p. 805.

† See General History; also, Boynton's History of West Point.

THE MONROE SAW-FACTORY

was erected during the war of 1812 to manufacture nails, and also saw-mill saws. The early proprietors were Messrs. McCoun, Daniel Jackson, and William Jackson. It was located near the present place of Charles Patterson, at the junction of Truxedo Creek with the Ramapo. The old buildings stood within the memory of some now living, but have been idle for seventy-five years probably.

MONROE WORKS.

The mills at this point date back to 1808. They were erected by a firm consisting of J. Blackwell and Hudson McFarland. The establishment was well equipped at an early day, having two trip-hammers, and manufacturing hoop- and sheet-iron, nails, shovels, spades, etc. The works under this name are now in operation.

HOUGHTON FARM.

Among the noted places in Monroe should be mentioned the stock farm and country-seat of Lawson Valentine. A successful business man from New York, he exhibited excellent judgment in the selection of a rural home. He purchased a valuable farm in a valley southeast of Mountainville. This estate he has improved in various ways. The grounds around the family residence are laid out with taste. The farm lots have been arranged in convenient form. His barns are models of convenience and comfort. Here he keeps some of the best stock in the country. In this delightful retreat he entertains his friends, and courteously shows to visitors the valuable stock in his yards and fields. He has been fortunate, too, in securing so good a farm so near to rough mountain scenery. Near him are the Highlands, with their pure air, their fairy legends, and their historical associations. A short distance to the west are the Schunemunk Mountains, upon the northernmost height of which stood the castle of Maringamus, the Indian chief. From thence the piercing gaze of the aboriginal warriors looked down upon these fair valleys. By an easy drive from Mr. Valentine's place, West Point is reached, with its varied attractions. With a station near, upon the Newburgh Branch of the Erie (Short-Cut), he can quickly reach the city, and by the same route finds ready facilities for shipment to and from his farm. In the hot season he often camps out on the cool, breezy heights near, and enjoys all the delights of summer retreats close to his own door. Surely one can imagine few situations combining so many of the pleasures of rural life.

XII.—MILITARY.

So far as the citizens of Monroe were engaged in the war of the Revolution their names will doubtless be found in the various muster-rolls and other documents given in this volume. Of the war of 1812, the Mexican war, and modern Indian wars, there are no documents showing whether any, and if any, how many, of the sons of Monroe were engaged in them. It was reserved for the great struggle of 1861-65 to develop the patriotism of these mountain neighborhoods. The sacrifices then made form an honorable chapter in the history of the town.

OFFICIAL ACTION, WAR OF 1861-65.

A special town-meeting was held Aug. 20, 1864, at Bayer's Hall, in the village of Monroe. I. C. Boyd was elected chairman. A committee of five was appointed to draft resolutions, viz., James Turner, C. B. Knight, George Thompson, A. P. Hulse, George K. Smith. At an adjourned afternoon session the committee reported a series of resolutions, which were adopted, 115 to 4.

They provided for raising the sum of $28,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary for the purpose of paying bounties. They authorized the payment of $600 bounty to each volunteer for three years, or to each person who might furnish a substitute for three years; $500 for two years; $400 for one year; and the town board were vested with discretion to increase the sum for three years' men to $800. The town board were fully authorized to issue the necessary bonds for raising the money in the name of the town, at seven per cent. per annum, payable, principal and interest, on the 1st of February,—that is, $3000 of principal each year, commencing in 1866.

Hand-money was voted to any person procuring volunteers at the rate of $50 for each three years' man, $30 for each two years' man, and $20 for each one year man.

The quota by the provost-marshal seems to have been made out on the old town of Monroe, as it was voted to attempt to secure a separate statement of the quota, and if not successful to confer with the officers of Highlands and Southfield, and to adopt some joint plan of action.

Another special meeting was held Aug. 30, 1864, A. P. Hulse, chairman, and it was unanimously voted to make the sum voted before $34,000 instead of $28,000, and the town officers were voted full authority as to the amount of bounty to be paid, and the steps necessary to be taken.

Another special meeting was held Jan. 28, 1865, at which William Seaman presided, and a tax of $20,000 was authorized for the payment of bounties, and full discretion voted to the town board as to the amount of bounty to be paid, and the means and methods to be adopted to fill the quota required of the town.

About this time the towns of Highlands and Southfield took similar action, both in 1864 and 1865.

After the three towns were consolidated again, the bonds issued by each were assumed by the reconstructed town of Monroe, and there is on record the following statement of the amounts raised and bonds issued by the three towns:

Monroe.....	$22,575.00
Southfield.....	31,443.62
Highlands.....	17,700.00
	$71,618.62
Repaid by State.....	33,500.00
	$38,118.62
The enlistments in the town prior to July, 1862, are said to have been in number.....

" " under call of July, 1864.....	33	" 35
" " of Dec. 19, 1864:
Highlands.....	14
Southfield.....	20
Monroe.....	14—48	" 48
Total.....	316	340

On settlement with the paymaster-general in 1865 the town was allowed:

For excess of 44 years.....	$8,800
" volunteers' bounties.....	24,700
Total.....	$33,500

The following list is prepared from the printed muster-in rolls of the State, and from the roll written up by the town clerk of 1865. All that can be obtained from those sources, as well as from others, is here given:

Perhaps the most remarkable men from the town were the Zindle brothers. They were born in Monroe, of American parents, of German ancestry. Daniel served three months in the Sixty-ninth Militia in the spring of 1861, and on return enlisted for three years in the Seventy-fourth Regiment. He was wounded in right arm at Williamsburg, May, 1862, but continued in the field until removed. His arm was amputated, but before the stump was healed he took the field at Malvern Hill, where he received six balls; one in the upper part of his forehead came near causing his death, one in the thigh shattered the bone of the left leg. Some eight inches of the bone from the hip-joint downwards was removed, and a silver tube inserted, around which the muscles and flesh reformed. Though considerably shot to pieces and a wreck, he would not have left the field at his own desire. John Zindle, Fifty-sixth Regiment, had arm shot off at Fair Oaks, and died of the injury July 14, 1862. Jonas Zindle enlisted in the Eighteenth Regiment, and was transferred to the One Hundred and Fifty-eighth. Nelson Zindle, in the Seventh Heavy Artillery, was taken prisoner in June, 1864. Monroe N. Zindle enlisted Feb. 9, 1864, in Seventh Heavy Artillery, and was reported "missing in action, June 10, 1864."

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

PETER TOWNSEND.

The Townsend family are of English lineage, and since their advent to America have been largely identified with the manufacturing and commercial interests of the county. Peter Townsend, the first of the name in Orange County, and the grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch, was a former resident of Long Island, and, in company with his father-in-law, William Hawxhurst, located at Stirling, Warwick township, the latter gentleman having purchased the Stirling tract, embracing 23,000 acres, a portion of which lay in the State of New Jersey. Mr. Townsend at once made this point the centre of an extensive manufacturing interest. He erected works embracing a furnace, forges, and an anchory, and filled both government and private contracts of considerable magnitude. The first anchor used by the United States government was made at this establishment, five frigates being at this time equipped, and later the whole navy. Here was forged the chain, weighing over one hundred tons, stretched across the Hudson River during the war of the Revolution to prevent the British from passing above West Point. It was conveyed to its destination in parts, which were later attached by swivels.

Mr. Townsend was married to Miss Hannah Hawxhurst, and had sons Peter, William, and Isaac, and daughters Anne, wife of Solomon Townsend, proprietor, in connection with William Townsend, of the Augusta Iron-Works on the Ramapo; and Sallie, who became Mrs. Dr. Anthony Davis, of Goshen, N. Y. The death of Peter Townsend occurred during the year 1783. His son Peter was born in the year 1770, and when a lad rode to New York on horseback to witness the evacuation of that city by the British. His early life was spent at the Stirling Iron-Works or at the homestead in Chester, then part of Goshen township. He succeeded his father in the management of his extensive manufacturing interests, and may be regarded as the pioneer in the introduction of anthracite coal as a fuel for smelting iron ores.

Mr. Townsend married Miss Alice, daughter of Comfort Cornell, early during the present century, and had children,—William H., Peter, Isaac, Robert C., George E., and one daughter, Elizabeth, wife of J. H. Austin, of Staten Island.

The death of Peter Townsend, the second of the name, occurred during the year 1857. His son Peter, the present representative of the family, was born May 13, 1803, at the Chester homestead, where his early life was passed, his education having been acquired first in New York and later at Newburgh and on Long Island. Having served an apprenticeship in the counting-house of Jacob Barker, of New York, he repaired to Canandaigua, N. Y., and embarked in mercantile pursuits. In 1827 he returned to his early home, and, in connection with his brother, succeeded to the iron manufacturing interests, the estate at this time embracing, besides the Stirling property, the works at Southfield, Monroe township, and abounding in valuable ores of iron.

Mr. Townsend was united in marriage July 9, 1828, to Miss Caroline, daughter of Capt. Jasper Parish, of Canandaigua, N. Y., to whom were born children,—Elizabeth, widow of Gen. Thomas Francis Meagher; Alice; Mrs. S. L. M. Barlow; and Caroline, widow of David Crawford. The death of Mrs. Townsend occurred July 20, 1874, at Southfield, the family residence. Her many graces of mind and heart had endeared her alike to the home circle and to friends. Her winning presence and cheerful spirits were the sources of unfailing pleasure in social life, while her kindly heart and beneficent life brought happiness to many households.

Mr. Townsend is in his political predilections a firm Republican, with no official aspirations, but with a just appreciation of the civil responsibilities which fall to the lot of every good citizen. Though his family are of Quaker extraction, he affiliates with the Presbyterian denomination, Mrs. Townsend having been a member of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

HON. MORGAN SHUIT.

The Shuit family were early residents of Westchester County, Elisha, the father of the subject of this biographical sketch, having been a native of Eastchester, in that county, and born June 12, 1788. He later removed to Ridgefield, Conn., and engaged in farming pursuits, having married Miss Sallie, daughter of Joseph Mead, Esq., whose birth occurred April 3, 1788. Their children were Joseph M., born in 1810; Morgan, Mary Ann; whose birth occurred in 1815; and Ruth Ann, who died in infancy.

Morgan is a native of Ridgefield, Conn., where his birth occurred Jan. 12, 1812, and where his early years were spent. Mr. Shuit's educational opportunities were of a very limited character, and his successful and useful career may be attributed in a greater degree to superior qualities of mind and will rather than to early opportunities for culture. He acquired a trade in his New England home, and in 1833 removed to Orange County, where his recent acquirements were made useful. In 1837, mercantile pursuits having presented a more profitable field, he embarked in business at Highland Mills, and continued at this point until 1860. In April, 1867, having relinquished trade, he removed to the farm which is his present home. Mr. Shuit was married to Miss Mary Ann, daughter of Isaac B. Titus, Esq., of Monroe, whose family were of Quaker descent. Their children were Hannah, born in 1847; Mary Ann, whose birth occurred in 1849; William W., born in 1851; Sarah M., born in 1854; Elizabeth T., whose birth occurred in 1856; Harriet T., born in 1860; and Phila M., born in 1862. Mrs. Shuit's death occurred in 1867, and Mr. Shuit was married a second time, to Miss Phebe B. Titus, sister of his first wife.

The peculiar abilities of Mr. Shuit eminently fitted him for public life, which was also in harmony with his tastes. He was in 1843 elected justice of the peace, which office was held by him for thirty-six consecutive years. In 1849 he was chosen as supervisor of his township, and still holds the office. He was for many years justice of sessions, and was during 1879 and 1880 the representative of his district in the State Legislature. Mr. Shuit has in these positions manifested devotion to duty and marked ability. His constituents discerning this fact, have testified their confidence in the willing suffrages they have accorded him. He was among the most ardent supporters of the government during the late conflict, and personally superintended the raising of recruits and their equipment. His services are much in demand in the adjustment of estates, and in matters involving the amicable settlement of claims. Mr. Shuit is a Republican in politics, having espoused its principles as more closely allied to those of the old Whig doctrines of his early years. He is a liberal supporter of church and school interests, to both of which he has generously contributed.

PETER P. PARROTT.

Mr. Parrott is a native of New Hampshire, having been born in Portsmouth. During the year 1837 he removed to Orange County and located at Woodbury, in the township of Monroe, where he assumed the management of the interests of the Woodbury Iron Company. The following year he became identified with the charcoal furnace located at Greenwood, in the same township, having removed to the latter place, and managed successfully the business of both enterprises. The Greenwood property was at this time in the hands of individuals with whom Mr. Parrott became soon after associated as joint proprietor. In 1853, in connection with his brother, Robert P. Parrott, he constructed the present anthracite furnace, and eventually became its sole owner. He continued in this relation until his sons were recently admitted to a partnership, under the style of The Parrott Iron Company. The ores of this immediate section are superior in quality, and embrace the Warwick, Bull, Hogencamp, Mount Bashan, O'Neil, and other mines. Of these, the O'Neil mine, owned by Mr. Parrott, has yielded the main supply, and been successfully worked for a period of fifty years. The capacity of the anthracite furnace is 200 tons per week, which is principally used in the manufacture of hardware and stove-plates. An important branch of industry in connection with this enterprise is the manufacture of mineral wool or silicate cotton. This is produced from the vitreous molten earthy refuse called slag while the latter is yet in a liquid condition. Steam or air-jets are blown with strong pressure through small streams of the slag, converting the latter into a continuous spray of red-hot filaments, which are intermixed with small particles of chilled slag in the form of globules or shot. By means of air-drafts and subdivisions of the receiving chambers different grades of wool are obtained, which are pressed in bags and boxes to a consistency which will prevent its further settling when in use. This material has been proved a perfect non-conductor between heat and cold, and has found a ready market.

Wm. T. Parrott

This apparent digression in the biographical sketch of Mr. Parrott will doubtless convey an accurate idea of the successful career which he has achieved; not as the result of promising beginnings and ample capital, but wholly as the reward of energy and business capacity. He may in the largest sense be identified with the self-made men of the county of Orange. Mr. Parrott, though not ambitious for public distinction, is ever found associated with the best interests of his village and township, Greenwood being substantially a hamlet founded and nurtured by himself. In politics Mr. Parrott is a Republican. His religious predilections are in harmony with the tenets of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Together with his brother he erected St. John's Episcopal church at Greenwood, and also donated land for the building of a Roman Catholic house of worship. Mr. Parrott was in 1843 united in marriage to Miss Mary, daughter of Richard D. Arden, Esq., of Phillipstown, Putman Co., N. Y., to whom eight children were born.

ALEXANDER THOMPSON.

The Thompson family, one of the most influential in Monroe township, are of Irish extraction. William Thompson, the grandfather of the subject of this biographical sketch, was for years a resident of Chester, where his death occurred. His children were George, Robert, Phineas H., Benjamin, and two daughters, Elizabeth and Keturah. Of this number, Phineas H., the father of Alexander, was born July 4, 1789, and was, Dec. 23, 1812, united in marriage to Miss Rachel, daughter of Birdseye Young. To Mr. and Mrs. Thompson eleven children were born in the following order: Elizabeth, Harrison, Charles, Phineas, Alexander, Cornelia Y., Keturah, Isaac H., Virgil, Nathan Y., and Edmund. Alexander, whose life is here briefly reviewed, was born Aug. 27, 1820, in the township of Monroe, upon the homestead which is his present residence. He availed himself of such limited advantages of education as the public school afforded, and afterwards determined to render himself independent of the freaks of a capricious fortune by the acquirement of a substantial trade. He repaired to Newburgh and became a skillful carpenter, continuing his pursuits for some years, and eventually returning again to the homestead. Mr. Thompson was married, Feb. 19, 1856, to Miss Eleanor, daughter of Peter Bush, Esq., of Monroe. Their children are Phineas H., Ella B., and Alexander, all of whom reside with their parents. Mr. Thompson has latterly devoted his energies to the labors of an agriculturist, and has made the dairy a specialty. In this, as in other occupations to which his abilities have been directed, he has been eminently successful. He is actively interested in the Farmers' Creamery Association of Turners, of which organization he is president. In his political affiliations Mr. Thompson is a Democrat, though in no sense a politician, preferring rather the quiet routine of his daily employments to the excitements of public life. He is a worshiper at the Presbyterian Church in Monroe, of which Mrs. Thompson and her daughter are members.

PETER TURNER.

Peter Turner, the son of Gilbert and Hannah (Brewster) Turner, may with justice be numbered among the most enterprising and capable of the business men of the township of Monroe. He was a native of Putnam Co., N. Y., and was born March 14, 1794. The Turner family removed to Monroe in 1808, and Peter during his early life engaged in farming pursuits. His ambitious spirit prompted him to seek a wider field of usefulness than was at the time presented on the farm, and on the projection of the Erie Railroad he discerned in the location known as Turner's a point destined to grow in importance with the completion of the thoroughfare. He immediately erected a hotel, purchased the mill-property, and made other improvements, which caused the station of Turner's to become an influential centre of business. Its convenient distance from New York rendered it popular as a place of refreshment for railroad travelers, and Mr. Turner speedily became one of the most popular caterers on the Erie Railroad. He was married Nov. 16, 1816, to Miss Mary Ann, daughter of James Galloway, and was the father of four sons.—Charles, James G., and Gilbert, who reside in Monroe, and Theron S., whose residence is Cornwall-on-the-Hudson. Mr. Turner was a second time married, November, 1866, to Mrs. Lavinia Wiley, who survives him.

In politics Mr. Turner was a staunch Republican. Being absorbed with his daily avocations, he found little inclination for the engrossing demands of public life, and was indifferent to official honors. In all business relations he enjoyed a reputation for energy, sagacity, and strict integrity. Mr. Turner, though not connected with any religious denomination, was a liberal supporter of the gospel, and contributed equally to the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches of the township during his lifetime. His career was a marked example of the success which arises from humble beginnings, and is the result of ceaseless toil combined with sound business principles. The death of Mr. Turner occurred Oct. 16, 1875, at his residence in Turner's village.

PETER B. BUSH.

The early representatives of the Bush family emigrated from Holland, though little is known of their history by the descendants now residing in Monroe. Henry, the grandfather of Peter B., was a native of Orange County, and the father of the following sons and daughters: Samuel, John, Peter H., Henry, William, Martha, Rebecca, Rachel, and Margaret. Peter H., the third in order of birth, was born in northern New Jersey, Nov. 11, 1783, and later became a resident of Ramapo, Rockland Co., N. Y., where he pursued his vocation of millwright. He was united in marriage to Miss Mary, daughter of James Smith, of Monroe, to whom were born children named respectively Matilda, Mary Ann, Henry, James, and Margaret. By a second union, with Miss Abigail Smith, a sister of the first Mrs. Bush, his children were Elizabeth, Samuel J., Peter B., Nathaniel D., Rachel, Sarah, Eleanor, Cornelius, Arminda, Phebe, and Hudson. Mr. Bush survived until May 4, 1836, and died in his fifty-third year. The birth of his son Peter B. occurred June 8, 1820, in Orange County. The family at a late period removed to a farm in the vicinity of the Greenwood Iron-Works, where he availed himself of the exceedingly limited opportunities for education which the district afforded. The death of his father, while the children were still in their growing years, entailed a heavy responsibility upon Peter B. He, however, manfully accepted the situation, and thus added greatly to the comfort and prosperity of the family. In 1853 he purchased the homestead farm and became its sole owner. In 1862, Mr. Bush changed his residence, and became the proprietor of the estate on which he at present resides. He was married, in 1858, to Miss Harriet, daughter of David Ford, of Monroe, and has three children,—

Minnie, H. Greeley, and Samuel. Mr. Bush is a Republican in politics, having been in early years an Old-Line Whig, and cast his first vote for Henry Clay, in 1844. He manifests much interest in the success of his party and its principles, but declines any participation in the official honors which accompany its victories. Mr. Bush affiliates with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Monroe, of which Mrs. Bush is a member.

JOHN GOFF.

The ancestors of the Goff family in America were early emigrants from Ireland, and probably first settled on Long Island, whence the progenitors of John Goff came to Orange County. Mr. Goff was born in Monroe township, Oct. 19, 1800, and passed the early portion of his life at the home of his parents, Michael and Elizabeth Goff. He continued farming occupations until the age of manhood; was united in marriage, April 5, 1821, to Miss Phebe, daughter of Gilbert and Hannah Turner, and then, desiring a more extended field of labor, removed to New York City, where he was for fourteen years engaged in the milk business. He returned again to Monroe, and resided for four years upon the Turner homestead, after which he removed to the village of Monroe, and purchased what is known as the McGarrah property. Mr. Goff then became a landlord, and continued to be for a period of twenty-eight years one of the most popular hosts in the county. He then retired to private life, but retained his former residence. In all the relations of life Mr. Goff was an esteemed and influential citizen. Though not immediately connected with either of the religious denominations, he was a cheerful supporter of all churches, and contributed willingly to their advancement. He manifested much public spirit, and established a reputation for soundness of judgment, both in matters of business and in the larger sphere of public life. Mr. Goff was a Democrat in his political views, and keenly alive to the success of his party, though never himself ambitious for office. The death of Mr. Goff occurred in Monroe, Feb. 13, 1881, in his eighty-first year; that of Mrs. Goff having taken place on Dec. 24, 1878.

GILBERT T. SMITH.

The paternal grandfather of Mr. Smith was Clark Smith, Esq., whose birth occurred at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson. His children were eleven in number,—Joseph, Asahel, Oliver, Clark, Isaac, Thomas, Rensselaer, Elijah, Hannah, and two whose death occurred at an early age. Asahel, one of the older sons, was born at Woodbury, in the township of Monroe, where he resided until the age of manhood. At a later period he chose Turner's as a place of residence, and was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth, daughter

Peter B. Bush

JOHN GOFF.

Gilbert J. Smith

J. HORTON THOMPSON.

The grandfather of Mr. Thompson was George Thompson, who was of Irish parentage, and a resident of Blooming-Grove, in Orange County. He was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Gregory, of Monroe, and had children,—Abijah W., Nathaniel, James G., Hannah (Mrs. Gerret Duryea), Susan (Mrs. Nathaniel Racket), Mary (Mrs. Isaac Lee), Eunice (Mrs. David Case), Nancy (Mrs. Gen. Henry Duryea), and Elmira (Mrs. Oliver B. Tuthill). Mr. Thompson spent his life upon the homestead in Blooming-Grove, having been an energetic and exemplary citizen. His son Nathaniel, the father of the subject of this biography, was born Dec. 22, 1792, at the home of his parents, where the early years of his life were spent. He served with credit in the war of 1812, and later followed farming pursuits, having removed in 1820 to Monroe, on the land now occupied by his son, George W. Thompson. Nathaniel Thompson was married, Jan. 22, 1818, to Miss Sarah, daughter of Jeremiah Horton, of Blooming-Grove, to whom two children were born, J. Horton and George W., both of whom reside in Monroe. The following mention of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson appears in the Horton genealogical record: "Sarah Thompson was one of the excellent of the earth,—faithful, kind, energetic, and industrious, exemplifying Christianity in her daily walk and conversation. She was ever sunshine for the family. Mr. Thompson was an upright, Christian man, who lived a life of usefulness." Their son, J. Horton, was born Jan. 13, 1821, in Monroe, and devoted his early years to school, and subsequently to labor, having engaged in teaching for a brief period. He was married Dec. 20, 1845, to Miss Mary, daughter of Samuel Webb, of Monroe, and is the parent of three daughters,—Sarah (Mrs.

J. Horton Thompson

Asahel Smith), Anna (now deceased), and Nancy.

Mr. Thompson after his marriage purchased his present home, and has since been extensively engaged in dairying. He has led an energetic life, which has been mainly devoted to the interests of his farm, having little taste for the distractions and responsibilities of a public career. He is in his political predilections a staunch Republican, though not an aspirant for office.

In their religious preferences Mr. Thompson's family are Presbyterians, Mrs. Thompson being a member of the Presbyterian Church at Monroe.

Isaac H. Thompson.

The pioneer representative of the Thompson family probably left Ireland for a home in the New World at a very early date, and eventually located in the township of Goshen, where he married. Among his children was William, who was united in marriage to Miss Mittie Hudson, and had sons,—George, Robert, Phineas H., and Benjamin, and daughters,—Elizabeth and Keturah. Phineas H., who is the father of Isaac H. Thompson, was born in 1789, and spent his early years in labor upon the property of his father. His marriage to Miss Rachel Youngs, of Chester, occurred in 1812, and to this union eleven children were born, whose names are specified in an accompanying sketch of Alexander Thompson. The birth of Isaac H., one of the sons, occurred April 11, 1827, in Monroe, where his time until manhood was spent in study at the public school of the neighborhood, or in cultivating the land owned by his father. At the age of eighteen he acquired the trade of a carpenter and joiner, and followed this avocation with more or less regularity for a period of thirty years. In 1870,

Mr. Thompson purchased the farm which is his present residence, and has since been extensively engaged in dairying. In this as in his previous occupation he has been successful, not so much from fortunate circumstances as from the development of those qualities which are the inevitable exponents of success. Mr. Thompson was united in marriage, Jan. 18, 1854, to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Elmor Earl, of Monroe. They have four children,—Rachel (Mrs. W. S. Allen), Elmor, Eliza, and Virgil. Mr. Thompson at present fills the responsible office of superintendent of the Farmers' Creamery Association, the buildings of which are located on his land.

He is a Democrat in politics, though seldom actively interested in the strifes of party, and has little ambition for official honors. He has nevertheless filled the office of highway commissioner for successive terms.

In his religious preferences he is an attendant upon the ministrations of the Presbyterian Church at Monroe, of which Mrs. Thompson is a member.

II.—NATURAL FEATURES.

This town is rightly named. The range of hills from which it receives its designation extends along the whole river front, from below Fort Montgomery on the south to Cro' Nest on the north. They form so distinct a feature of the geological history of the county that their description is properly included in the chapter upon that subject, to which the reader is referred. The whole line is noted in history and romance, and in modern times has become the resort of hundreds of summer tourists, who seek health and pleasure upon the breezy heights, beside the crystal waters of the mountain ponds, or in the dark forest shades. Several small rivulets flow into the Hudson, one just south of Cro' Nest; a second at Washington valley; a third, the outlet of Bog Meadow Pond, at Highland Falls; a fourth some distance below; and a fifth at Fort Montgomery. In the southwest part of the town are several rivulets which flow southward into the town of Monroe, and become tributaries of Poplopen's Creek, which empties into the Hudson just south of Highland, within the county of Rockland. The most noted ponds in Highlands are Bog Meadow Pond, Round Pond No. 1, Long Pond, and Cranberry Pond.

III.—EARLY SETTLEMENT.

In mentioning titles in and near West Point the date of the first grant is given as 1723, and this was obtained on the express condition that settlement should be made within three years. As this title was made valid, and became the foundation to the present title of the United States, actual settlement should be inferred. But the names of the settlers have not come down to the present time except as mentioned below. Major Boynton, in his work upon West Point, says,—

"The interval between the granting of the patents and the transfer of the titles, before described, down to the period at which the American Revolution commenced are blanks in historical literature. No traditions even of early settlers are extant, and the probabilities are that, beyond a settlement made to secure a site or grant, West Point, being in a region of primary stratified rocks, heavily covered with drift deposits, and without a suitable soil for cultivation, remained a mere woodland tract, possessing no higher value than attaches to similar adjoining points in the Highlands which have remained unsettled and uncultivated to this day."

It is however pretty certainly established that John Moore, the patentee, did locate upon his purchase, and very probably within the required three years, thus making the date of his removal here about 1725. His homestead was in what has since been called Washington Valley, and Gen. Washington is said to have occupied the same dwelling for a time. The house was afterwards destroyed, and a second one erected upon the same site was also long since taken down. The remains of the cellar are still visible, and this spot may undoubtedly be regarded as the point of first settlement within the limits of the present town of Highlands.

Of Mr. Moore's children there are not many facts now to be obtained. The family were inclined to be loyalists at the opening of the Revolution, and though it is evident they were not violent opposers of the American cause, from the fact that their lands were not confiscated, yet they went to Nova Scotia as the Revolutionary troubles thickened around them, and afterwards to North Carolina. There they became prominent in public affairs, one of them being elected Governor of that State. It was of Stephen Moore, of Caswell Co., N. C., that the United States bought West Point in 1790, as already mentioned. The names of Stephen Moore and James Moore appear in the town records of Cornwall between 1765 and 1775. A daughter of John Moore married Hugh McClellan some time before the Revolution or about the time of its commencement.

McClellan lived at West Point, or rather somewhat west towards the West Grove neighborhood. He was active in support of the American cause, whatever may have been the course of his immediate family connections. Many incidents are related of his personal prowess, his prompt movements in times of danger, and his daring bravery. Though not in the army as a soldier, he undoubtedly earned the right to be considered one by fighting "upon his own hook" everywhere around West Point and at all times. He was employed in hauling stone at the erection of Fort Putnam. On one occasion he crossed the river alone and brought powder to West Point at the imminent risk of capture and death. These are some of the traditional stories of his exploits, many of which are, perhaps, authentic.

The children of Mr. McClellan's first marriage removed to North Carolina some time after the war,—perhaps at the time their relatives, the Moores, went to that State from Nova Scotia. Hugh McClellan married for his second wife a daughter of the early Kronkhite family of West Grove. By this marriage there were two children, a son, who died in early or

* In the county clerk's office is this record :

"The following memorandum was entered at the request of Mr. Gabriel Ludlow the first day of June, 1732: 'These are to certify to all persons whom it may concern that on the 25th of February, 1731, a tree was cut on the east side of the house of Gabriel Ludlow within twenty feet of the said house marked T V H.'" middle life, leaving, however, a family of several children, and a daughter, who became the wife of James Denton. Mr. Denton was from Newburgh, but settled at West Point. A son of Mr. Denton, James Denton, Jr., is a merchant of Highland Falls at the present time, and another son, John Denton, is a farmer, now residing on the well-known homestead of the Bull family, below Highland Falls.

It should be added that the claim made by James Denton, Sr., under the McClellan occupancy, to which we have alluded in speaking of titles, was pressed in good faith, believing the title to be valid for whatever land Hugh McClellan had actually occupied. The statement given above, while in the main correct, is nevertheless regarded by the family as the government side of the story. There are said to have been certain papers showing that McClellan had derived some rights direct from the Moore family—rights which were not reserved in deeding to the United States, but nevertheless antedated that transaction. Twenty-one years' undisputed possession, following upon a legal and permitted entry, is understood to have strong force in determining a title under the laws of New York, hence there was certainly some ground for the claim to rest upon. As a matter of fact, too, the suit for ejectment was terminated by a compromise. The aged widow of McClellan was paid to surrender her claim, and if a decision was rendered against her it was only pro forma as the result of the settlement.

Still further tracing the story of early settlement, it is probable that Cornelius Swim was the first pioneer occupant in the vicinity of Highland Falls. His homestead was the present place of Judge Charles Tracy. The Swim family had removed to this country from England about the year 1686, and as part of a colony settled on the east side of the river, opposite West Point, the location being on what is now known as the Phillips property. They were offered a large tract there for ten cents an acre, but (as Cornelius Nelson, our informant, quaintly observes) "they had not the ten cents," and therefore their title was not secured, and they were obliged to leave when another purchaser bought the tract at fifteen cents an acre.

The date when Cornelius Swim settled at what is now Highland Falls, does not appear to be known among his descendants, but it was at least some years prior to the Revolution, as his name appears in the town records of Cornwall, 1765 to 1775.

It is understood by Mrs. William Avery, a descendant, that the father of Cornelius Swim was Albert Swim, and that he came to this side of the river also, but perhaps as an aged man in the family of Cornelius. One of the sons of Cornelius was John Swim, and his children were six sons,—Albert, Andrew, John, Cornelius, William, and Samuel; also six daughters,—Mrs. Cashman, Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. Garrison, Mrs. Rose, Mrs. Fitch, and one who married, and moved West. Another son of the pioneer Cornelius was Cornelius, Jr., and there was at least one daughter, who became Mrs. Cronk. Cornelius Swim, Sr., was killed by a British scout because he refused to divulge the place where certain army supplies were concealed.

Another early name is that of Cornelius Gee. He lived before the Revolution at West Point. The sharp angle, the exact "Point," is still known by his name. He was from the colony already mentioned on the east side of the river. Of his children there are mentioned by a recent writer (Mr. Cornelius Nelson), Jabez Gee and Mrs. Margaret Swim. It is of a member of the Gee family, "Aunt Sally Gee," that the traditional Highland "tea story" is told. It is well known that the basis of this now abundant beverage was a scarce article in Revolutionary days. The Gee family had, however, a half-pound of tea bought not long before the British assault on the Highland forts. At the time of the capture, and while the flames of Fort Montgomery were lighting up all this region, announcing the success of the British, "Aunt Sally," regarding all as lost, determined to have at least one good cup of tea before commencing the inevitable flight. Accordingly, she emptied the half-pound—the whole of it—into the old-fashioned tea-pot; but, alas! she had overdone the matter,—the beverage was too bitter for use.

Mr. Gee established, in company with Jacob Nelson, the old ferry of early times from "Gee's Point" to "Constitution Island." This is often mentioned in the annals of the Revolutionary struggle, and is usually spoken of as "Nelson's Ferry." Mr. Nelson was a descendant of one of the colonists already mentioned who settled on the Phillips property in 1686. Jacob Nelson, the associate of Mr. Gee in the ferry, was the son of Jacob Nelson, Sr. The children of Jacob Nelson, Jr., were Miphiboseth, Cornelius, Justus, Elisha, and three daughters, Mrs. Gabriel Odell, Mrs. John Warren, and Mrs. Peter Warren. A son of Miphiboseth, Cornelius Nelson, is the only member of the family who settled on the west side of the river. He came to Highland Falls in 1844. We are indebted to him for many of these items of early settlement. Jacob Nelson, Jr., managed the ferry business upon the east side of the river, and Cornelius Gee upon the west side.

Nelson's Point "opposite to Fort Arnold"* is mentioned by Gen. Washington in a report to Congress early in the year 1779, in which he calls attention to the danger that the enemy might advance via "Continental village" and gain "Nelson's Point."

"Nelson's Ferry" is also mentioned in the accounts of the great celebration at West Point, May 31, 1782, in honor of the birth of the Dauphin of France. The Tenth Massachusetts Regiment is described as being encamped in the cleared fields above Nelson's Ferry.

Early settlement in the West Grove neighborhood dates back to about the time of the Revolution. An early pioneer was John Kronkhite.* He settled on what is now the Samuel Van Voorhees place. He had one son, Richard, and three daughters, Mrs. James Green, Mrs. James Wilkins, Mrs. Howell. The family were originally from Westchester County.

* Afterwards named Fort Clinton.

John Cronkhite, a son of Richard, is residing at the present time on a part of the old tract of his grandfather, and from him these and other items are obtained.

Moses Clark was also an early settler. His homestead was the present place of his grandson, James Clark. The name of Moses Clark appears in the Cornwall records between 1765 and 1775, and if it relates to the Moses Clark of West Grove, would indicate his residence here before the Revolutionary war.

Tobias Weygant is mentioned by Mr. Cronkhite as another early settler of West Grove. His homestead passed to William Rose, to John S. Gilbert, and is now the Zint place. Tobias Weygant's name is also in the early Cornwall records, but the name was evidently a favorite one in the Weygant family, and may not prove that the West Grove Weygant was here before the Revolution.†

From the Cornwall records and from the names attached to the Revolutionary Articles of Association, we mention a few who were probably living on the territory of the present town of Highlands.

Thomas Collins lived in Highlands, on the Bergh property. Joseph Collins is also mentioned.

William Cooper was living near Fort Montgomery before the Revolution. Thomas Cooper, mentioned in the old records, was also in the same neighborhood.

Isaac Garrison's name appears in the old Cornwall records between 1765 and 1775. He lived about half-way from Highland Falls to Fort Montgomery, in the Middle Highlands neighborhood. He was the father of the well-known C. K. Garrison; also of Abram, Benjamin, Oliver. Jonas Garrison is also mentioned in the early records.

William Horton. The Horton family in early times were west of Fort Montgomery, south part of the town. Zaccheus Horton is also mentioned in the early records, and Thomas.

Maurice Havens. This family name was in Highlands, west part of the town, before the Revolution.

David June. The Junes were in the south part of what is now Highlands at later periods, along the Rockland County line, and that neighborhood is probably where this man lived.

D. Lancaster, mentioned before the Revolution, was doubtless on the present Lancaster place, on the line between Cornwall and Highlands.

Stephen Moore. This name appears in the Cornwall records, 1765 to 1775, and was probably the son of the patentee already mentioned.

John Parker's name appears in the records, 1765 to 1775. He lived, it is presumed, at West Grove, in this town.

Israel Rose lived at what is now called Highland Falls. He had a son Israel, who died at the age of seventy, about twelve years ago.

Samuel Rockwell lived in the Middle Highlands. He was the grandfather of Samuel Rockwell, who died about thirty years ago.

S. Sheldon, mentioned before the Revolution, probably lived at Fort Montgomery.

Birdseye Young. Mr. Cornelius Nelson states that the Young family were in Highlands at an early day.

James Stought (probably Vought), found in the Cornwall records, may have been in Highlands.

Generally speaking, the settlements in this town were along the Hudson and in the West Grove neighborhood. Only small tracts in the mountain portions of the town have been settled at any time.

Isaac Faurot, who died a few years since in this town at an advanced age, was a hand on the first steamboat that sailed up the Hudson, under the command of Capt. Wiswell.

IV.—ORGANIZATION.

For many years the town of Cornwall had consisted of the thickly settled territory north of the mountains, and the localities around Highland Falls and Fort Montgomery far to the south. It was an unnatural, inconvenient alliance. To transact public official business together required the people of one part or the other to travel over long and difficult mountain roads, or to take a trip by the river. Indeed, to secure an attendance at town-meetings frequently required the chartering of a boat to transport the voters, and with a sharp political contest it must have required two boats, carrying different flags. All the town boards, assessors, road commissioners, overseers of the poor, and town auditors could only meet at considerable sacrifice of time, and considerable trouble and expense. It was a very obvious necessity that led to a movement for a new town south of Cro' Nest,—a town that should consist of territory upon which the people might easily meet and transact the public business.

Accordingly the petition for a new town met with little opposition, and Highlands, the youngest of the towns of Orange County, was authorized to organize by the action of the board of supervisors at the annual meeting of 1872.

The first town-meeting was held the next spring, as shown by the following record:

At the first town-meeting held in the town of Highlands, Orange Co., N. Y., March 4, 1873, at the house of Charles Engleskircher, the following-named persons were elected town officers for the town of Highlands: Supervisor, William Avery; Town Clerk,

* Many members of the family drop the final syllable at the present time, and K has given place to C.

Henry Darcy; Justices of the Peace, Wm. B. Michaels, Wm. C. Likely; Collector, John Drew; Commissioners of Highways, Jacob Foster, Isaac H. Meeks; Assessors, John G. W. Kronkhite, Joseph Montross; Overseers of the Poor, Michael Maher, John R. Springstead; Constables, Henry Laforge, Henry Birdsley, Oliver Cronk, Jabez A. Odell; Inspectors of Election, John J. Smith, John Boyle, George Stewart; Town Sealer, John A. Cook; Game Constable, Henry Laforge; Pound-master, Thomas Wilson.

The next town-meeting was voted to be held at the house of George Stephens.

The following have been the principal town officers from 1872 to 1880:

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

1873, Wm. B. Michaels, Wm. C. Likely; 1874, John H. Smith, William Faurot; 1875, Wm. Avery; 1876, Wm. B. Michaels; 1877, E. C. Carpenter; 1878, Oliver H. Cronk; 1879, Wm. Avery; 1880, Ezra Drew.

V.—VILLAGES.

WEST POINT.

This place, having a national and world-wide reputation, is situated in Highlands. Here occurred those Revolutionary incidents that constitute such a wealth of patriotic associations. Here is located the military school of the nation, where have been educated the officers of our armies for a long series of years.

The place derives its name from the sharp point of land projecting into the Hudson from the west shore.

A post-office was established here at an early day. Maj. Roger Alden was the incumbent of the office for some years. Mr. Holt was a subsequent postmaster. In 1835, Prof. Claudius Berard was appointed to the office, and held it until his death in 1848. His widow was then named by the department, and she remained until 1870, a period of twenty-two years of long and careful service. The present incumbent, A. B. Berard, was appointed as her successor.

West Point, as a village, is composed almost wholly of the military school and the necessary structures connected with it. There is but little business distinct from that.

The tide of travel is provided for by only one hotel upon the military reservation of West Point. Cozzens' Hotel, near Highland Falls, was erected many years ago, and met the wants of those earlier years of summer flight from the cities.

HIGHLAND FALLS

is a thriving modern village one and a half miles south of West Point. It is situated on Bog Meadow Brook, and its name is derived from the falls in that stream. A post-office was established here July 14, 1849, under the name of Buttermilk Falls. Cornelius Nelson was appointed postmaster. Under the administration of James Buchanan he was removed and Timothy O'Leary appointed. At the expiration of Mr. Buchanan's term Mr. Nelson was reappointed, and is now (1880) in office.

The village in its present development is mostly modern, but the place has the charm of an early history reaching back nearly two hundred years to the times when the sons of the forest occupied all this region, and to those later periods when the first white men began to settle the west shore of the Hudson south of Cornwall.

The present business in Highland Falls, as shown by the advertising columns of the village paper, may be mentioned as follows: W. H. Edsall, physician and surgeon; Christopher Stark, dealer in oysters, clams, foreign and domestic fruits; Dr. W. E. Bird-sall, of Peekskill, performs dental operations at Highland Falls three times a week; Richard Darcy, mason and plasterer; T. E. Drew's, Mountain Dairy (at West Grove); P. R. Chapman, attorney- and counselor-at-law; Christopher Stark, news-dealer; George H. Turbush, painting; George Reppman, bakery and confectionery; Nellie McCabe, clothing, hats, caps, ladies' and gentlemen's furnishing goods; Kreutz' new bakery; Mrs. O'Neil, millinery, ladies' and gentlemen's furnishing goods; Krimmling, watchmaker and jeweler; Anthony Miller, hardware, willow- and wooden-ware; and Lambert Kleits, real estate dealer.

There are also several stores, as Chace's, groceries; Denton's, general assortment; Altshimer & Parry, dry-goods. There are also various mechanic shops. Hotels, Cozzens, Exchange, and others. All these, together with many handsome private residences, constitute a pleasant village and a thriving business place.

FORT MONTGOMERY.

This place perpetuates the name of old Fort Montgomery, which stood on the south side of Poplopen's Creek, at the junction with the Hudson.

The drive from West Point and Highland Falls to Fort Montgomery is one of the finest in the country. It affords some of the most delightful views, and there are many elegant villa-residences to be seen along the route.

The modern hamlet has but little business. Like many other points along the river, its chief interest is derived from its associations with the location and capture of the forts.

WEST GROVE

is a mountain hamlet, northwest of Highland Falls, in the vicinity of the beautiful ponds that form so delightful a feature of this elevated region.

The early settlers have been mentioned. There is no business to be described in this locality. The people of this beautiful mountain valley travel out to Highland Falls, or over the hills to Cornwall, for trade and for public business.

VI.—SCHOOLS.

The notes upon the organization of the schools of Cornwall, the names of the commissioners, inspectors, and superintendents, there given for the period from 1813 to 1856, must be referred to for information with reference to the school affairs of what is now the town of Highlands, then a part of Cornwall.

Outside of the military reservation there are now three districts. No. 1 constitutes the Fort Montgomery neighborhood. The school-house is located on the river road, a short distance north from this village. No. 2 comprises the village of Highland Falls and the surrounding vicinity.

No. 3 comprises the West Grove neighborhood, with a wide extent of mountain territory surrounding it. The school-house is in the valley of Bog Meadow Creek.

A large territory in the southwest is attached to a district of the town of Monroe, comprising a tract from Cranberry Pond on the east to Mount Rascal on the west, with not more than half a dozen families on the whole extent.

Upon the military reservation there is maintained a post-school for the children of soldiers and officers.

WEST POINT MILITARY ACADEMY.

This place was deemed of national importance as a military post during the war of the Revolution. At the close of the war the interesting question was thoroughly considered, how can the country be prepared for war and be successfully defended without a standing army?

Such was the public sentiment of that day over the rest of the civilized world that every nation deemed a standing army indispensable to its safety; but in this country public opinion was strongly against it. On the other hand, men versed in the affairs of government were aware of the danger of wholly dispensing with an army, and still secure that military knowledge which the exigencies of the future might require for the defense of the republic.

Sept. 20, 1776, the Continental Congress appointed a committee, consisting of Messrs. Sherman, Gerry, and Lewis, in accordance with a resolution of the same date, "to repair to headquarters, near New York, to inquire into the state of the army and the best means of supplying its wants."

One result of the investigations then made was the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Board of War be directed to prepare a Continental Laboratory and a Military Academy, and provide the same with proper officers."

At the request of the committee above named, Col. Henry Knox furnished a paper entitled "Hints for the Improvement of the Artillery of the United States." In that occurred the following paragraph:

"... And as officers can never act with confidence until they are masters of their profession, an Academy established on a liberal plan would be of the utmost service to the Continent, where the whole theory and practice of fortification and gunnery should be taught: to be nearly on the same plan as that of Woolwich, making allowance for the difference of circumstances; a place to which our enemies are indebted for the superiority of their artillery to all who have opposed them."

The matter being thus definitely brought to the attention of Congress, the following resolutions were adopted:

"CONTINENTAL CONGRESS,

"Oct. 1, 1776.

"Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to prepare and bring in a plan of a Military Academy at the army."

The members chosen were Mr. Hooper, Mr. Lynch, Mr. Wythe, Mr. Williams, and Mr. J. Adams.

It does not appear that this committee ever reported, or that any further steps were taken for some years in reference to it. At that time, too, the idea was evidently one of temporary instruction for rendering the Continental army more efficient, and not that of a permanent military school.

In determining the proper peace establishment which should exist after the war closed, the importance of making West Point a permanently fortified place was clearly brought out. Brig.-Gen. Huntingdon, in reporting upon this necessity, incidentally said, "And with a small additional expense an academy might be here instituted for instruction in all branches of the military art."

Col. Timothy Pickering discussed the matter at considerable length, opposed a proposition to establish several such schools at different arsenals, but favored one to be located at West Point. No immediate action was, however, taken. Seven years elapsed before the project had any further official notice.

Gen. Knox, Secretary of War, in an official report, Jan. 21, 1790, discussed the necessity for military education in general, but did not propose a permanent academy.

In 1793, Gen. Washington, in his annual message, suggested the inquiry, "Whether a material feature in the improvement of the system of military defense ought not to be to afford an opportunity for the study of those branches of the art which can scarcely ever be attained by practice alone." It is well known that this matter was a subject of earnest discussion in the cabinet at this time, and that the question whether the Constitution gave Congress the authority to establish such a school was brought up, and rendered Washington's recommendation less emphatic than it would otherwise have been.

The act of May 7, 1794, shows that Congress was also impressed with the necessity of military instruction in some form. It provided for a corps of artilleryists and engineers, to consist of four battalions, to each of which eight cadets were to be attached, and the Secretary of War was required to procure at the public expense the necessary books, instruments, and apparatus for the use and benefit of said corps.

In 1798, Congress authorized an additional regiment of the same force, and increased the cadets to 56.

There was yet no attempt to locate this corps at any one point, but the principle of admitting young men to a cadet grade in the army was fully adopted.

In July, 1798, Congress authorized the President to appoint four teachers for this corps. Boynton's history does not show that any were appointed, and if there were their names do not appear.

In 1800 the subject was fully investigated by Mr. McHenry, then head of the War Department, in a message communicated to Congress by President Adams. It was supplemented by another message, January 31st, in which the propriety and necessity of founding a military school were strongly enforced. A bill was introduced into Congress for the creation of such an institution. The bill was defeated by the parliamentary motion of postponement to one day beyond the session. But the subject was now fairly before Congress in a definite form.

Two years more elapsed, and then Congress, under date of Dec. 22, 1801, called upon the Secretary of War to lay before the House a statement of the existing military establishment. It was furnished on the 24th, and led to the passage of the act of March 16, 1802, by which the peace establishment was determined. By this act the artillerists and engineers were made to constitute two distinct corps. To one regiment of artillery 40 cadets were attached, and to the corps of engineers 10 cadets. Section 27 provided that the said corps, when organized, shall be stationed at West Point, in the State of New York, and shall constitute a military academy.

The institution, as it went into operation under this act, was nothing more than a mathematical school for the few cadets who were then in service, and under the direction of a private citizen, George Barron.

Col. Jonathan Williams, reporting with reference to the school, March 14, 1808, says,—

"A part only of the officers were appointed soon after the passage of the act, of whom the major (Williams, who was ex-officio the chief engineer, and two captains Barron and Mansfield) took charge of the academy, the students of which were the cadets belonging to the regiment of artillery. The major occasionally read lectures on fortifications, gave practical lessons in the field, and taught the use of instruments generally. The two captains taught mathematics,—the one in the line of geometrical, the other in that of algebraical, demonstrations."

Soon after the opening power was given by law to appoint a teacher of drawing and of the French language. It is evident that at this time the institution was a small and comparatively unimportant affair. The report, indeed, said of it, "In short, the Military Academy, as it now stands, is like a foundling, barely existing among the mountains, and nurtured at a distance, out of sight, and almost unknown to its legitimate parents."

A congressional committee—consisting of Messrs. Nicholas, of Virginia; Troup, of Georgia; Desha, of Kentucky; Upham, of Massachusetts; and Milner, of Pennsylvania—reported a bill April 12, 1808, which added 156 members to the corps of cadets. This gave to the institution a much greater extent, and it began to be in some sense a national school. During the next four years it received the attention of President Madison, and his messages had frequent recommendations with reference to it.

April 29, 1812, there was passed the act which really laid the broad basis of the West Point Military Academy of the present time. The number of cadets was limited to 260. The requirements for admission, the term of study and service, and the rate of pay and emoluments were definitely prescribed. The institution, thus fully established, did not, and does not, consist in buildings, apparatus, and location, but in a regularly-constituted military body, whose officers and professors are appointed, confirmed, and commissioned in the same manner and form as other army officers, and subjected to the same rules and articles of war as govern all the land forces of the United States.

It is not within the design of this article to trace the subsequent history of this institution, nor would the limits of this volume permit. Having shown the successive steps taken in establishing the academy, we can only add the following notice of the board of instruction:*

The first board of instruction, as provided in 1801, consisted of the following officers:

Superintendent, Jonathan Williams, major of engineers, April, 1802.

Teacher of Mathematics, William A. Barron, captain of engineers, April, 1802.

Teacher of Natural Philosophy, Jared Mansfield, captain of engineers, May, 1802.

James Wilson, student, first lieutenant engineers.

Alexander McComb, student, first lieutenant engineers.

Joseph G. Swift, student, second lieutenant engineers.

Simon McLin, student, second lieutenant engineers.

The superintendents from 1802 to 1880 have been as follows:

Jonathan Williams, major corps of engineers, from April, 1802, to July 31, 1812.

Alden Partridge, captain corps of engineers, from Jan. 3, 1815, to Nov. 25, 1816.

Joseph G. Swift, colonel corps of engineers, and brevet brigadier-general U.S.A., from Nov. 25, 1816, to Jan. 13, 1817.

* We find the following advertisements in old papers:

"Proposals will be received by the subscriber to build on the plain at the post of West Point next spring and summer a plain strong dry stone wall two hundred and thirty rods long—to be sunk 15 inches below the surface and raised five feet above it: the base to be 3 feet in thickness and the top 12 inches.

"The ditch for the foundation is to be filled with small round stones promiscuously thrown in to within six inches of the surface. Payment if required will be made on the completion of each fifty rods of said wall."

"GEORGE FLEMING,

"Acty. Assnt. Military Agent.

"WEST POINT, Nov. 11, 1805."

Alden Partridge, captain corps of engineers, from Jan. 13, 1817, to July 28, 1817.

Sylvanus Thayer, captain corps of engineers, and brevet major U.S.A., from July 28, 1817, to July 1, 1833.

René E. DeRussy, major corps of engineers, from July 1, 1833, to Sept. 1, 1838.

Richard Delafield, major corps of engineers, from Sept. 1, 1838, to Aug. 15, 1845.

Henry Brewerton, captain corps of engineers, from Aug. 15, 1845, to Sept. 1, 1852.

Robert E. Lee, captain corps of engineers, and brevet colonel U.S.A., from Sept. 1, 1852, to April 1, 1855.

Jonathan G. Barnard, captain corps of engineers, and brevet major U.S.A., from April 1, 1855, to Sept. 8, 1856.

Richard Delafield, major corps of engineers, from Sept. 8, 1856, to Jan. 23, 1861.

Peter G. T. Beauregard, captain corps of engineers, and brevet major U.S.A., from Jan. 23, 1861, to Jan. 28, 1861.

Richard Delafield, major corps of engineers, from Jan. 28, 1861, to March 1, 1861.

Alexander H. Bowman, major corps of engineers, from March 1, 1861, to July 1, 1864.

Z. B. Tower, major, from July 8, 1864, to Sept. 8, 1864.

G. W. Cullum, lieutenant-colonel, from Sept. 8, 1864, to Aug. 28, 1866.

Thomas G. Pitcher, colonel, from Aug. 28, 1866, to Sept. 1, 1871.

Thomas H. Ruger, colonel, from Sept. 1, 1871, to Sept. 1, 1876.

J. M. Schofield, major-general, from Sept. 1, 1876, to present date.

Subsequently to the compiling of the above list Gen. Schofield was relieved, and Gen. Howard was assigned to the command of the department.

The history of the West Point Military Academy has been so fully written by Capt. Boynton in his complete work; by Lossing in his "Field-Book of the Revolution," and by so many other authors, that it is deemed unnecessary to treat of the subject further in this history.

HIGHLAND FALLS SCHOOL.

This institution occupies a most beautiful site upon the banks of the Hudson at Highland Falls. A summer hotel of ample dimensions, standing a short distance south of Cozzens', was converted into a school building. The course of instruction is thorough. Special attention is given to preparing young men for admission to West Point.

VII. CHURCHES.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN SOCIETY OF THE HIGHLANDS

executed a certificate of incorporation Oct. 12, 1830. The proceedings were signed by Nathaniel Gregory and Samuel Spencer, and the trustees chosen were executed a paper under date of Oct. 13, 1830, proposing to erect two houses of worship,—one to be located near Buttermilk Falls, the other to be erected for the convenience of the people residing at the Forest of Dean, Queensborough, and part of Fort Montgomery neighborhood; these houses of worship to be open for the use of other denominations subject to reasonable regulations. The proceedings were signed by William Howe, Samuel Spencer, Peter Meeks. Twenty years later (April 1, 1850), the society was reorganized under the title of

William Howe, of Buttermilk Falls; Samuel Spencer, of West Point; and Peter Meeks, of West Grove. In this movement it was deemed best to take a wider view of the necessities of this entire region than was indicated by the above organization, and hence, under date of one day later, we find the following:

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN SOCIETY OF THE HIGHLANDS

"THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF THE HIGHLANDS."

The certificate was signed by John Van Deventer and John W. Hall. The trustees chosen were David Parry, Cornelius Nelson, Charles P. Smith, Alexander Mearns, and John M. Hall. We have no statistics of the church in response to our request.

Rev. E. P. Roe, now of Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, was the pastor for some years.

THE FIRST METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH AT FORT MONTGOMERY

executed a certificate of incorporation Jan. 11, 1831. The proceedings were signed by Thomas Potter and Ebenezer Bull, and the trustees chosen were Thomas Potter, Ebenezer Bull, Michael Jaquish, Hiram Tylor, and Silas Rockwell. This certificate shows undoubtedly the leading men interested in Methodist work in this place fifty years ago. The church has a good house of worship. We regret that a history of the church, in response to our invitation, has not reached us.

THE FIRST PROTESTANT METHODIST CHURCH AT BUTTERMILK FALLS

executed a certificate of incorporation March 4, 1845. The proceedings were signed by Charles P. Smith and James Thackara. The trustees chosen were Andrew Swaim, David Parry, James Thackara, Charles P. Smith, Wright Dusenbury.

This effort was discontinued after a short time, and the society ceased to exist, its members uniting with other denominations.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF HIGHLAND FALLS.

This constitutes one of the strong religious societies of the town. A house of worship was erected a few years since, and the society has a parsonage conveniently situated.

A history of this church, expected from the pastor, has not reached us.

THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY INNOCENTS (EPISCOPAL), CORNWALL, executed a certificate of incorporation Sept. 13, 1850. The paper was signed by Francis Rider, R. S. Smith, and Rev. J. B. Gibson. The wardens chosen were Robert W. Weir and Thomas Webb; the vestrymen were Dennis H. Mahar, W. H. C. Bartlett, A. E. Church, Francis Rider, R. S. Agnew, Thomas Corris, B. R. Alden, and R. S. Smith. Of this church the present pastor writes as follows:

"The Church of the Holy Innocents, Highland Falls, Orange Co., owes its existence in a great measure to the liberality of Prof. Robert W. Weir, for many years in charge of the department of drawing and painting in the United States Military Academy. The building was begun in the spring of 1846, and when finished was consecrated by Bishop DeLancey, July 1, 1847. In laying out the plot for the church, Prof. Weir placed it on the arc of a great circle passing longitudinally through the middle of the building and the City of Jerusalem, in allusion to Solomon's dedication of the Temple, and also of Daniel's opening his window towards the Holy City when he prayed.

"The material of which the church is built is the native stone, quarried on the spot. The baptismal font, of pre-eminently beautiful design and execution, was made also from a simple block of the native granite obtained in the near vicinity. Solidity, simplicity, and truth are the characteristics of the architecture, and the devout worshiper in this house of God cannot fail to be impressed with the feeling of reverence which its simple beauty and correct ornamentation inspire. The church will seat about 250 people; camp-stools placed in the aisles increase its seating capacity.

"The ground on which the church and rectory stand was deeded by the late W. B. Cozzens and wife to trustees, and subsequently vested in the church on its being incorporated, and consists of one and four-tenths acres. The present rector, Rev. W. R. Thomas, M.A., is the sixth in succession, his predecessors having been the Rev. C. H. Hall, D.D. (now of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, L. I.), the Rev. Messrs. Preston, J. B. Gibson, D.D., Henry E. Duncan, D.D., and the late Rev. Minot M. Wells. The latter clergyman held the rectorship for eighteen years.

"There are now (July, 1880) 100 communicants connected with the church, a flourishing Sunday-school, and various parochial agencies for the efficient carrying on of its legitimate work. The body corporate of this church (July, 1880) is as follows: Rector, Rev. W. R. Thomas, M.A.; Senior Warden, Prof. Robert W. Weir; Junior Warden, Stephen R.

Roe, Esq.; Vestrymen, Prof. George L. Andrews, Charles Tracy, Esq., John Pierpont Morgan, Esq., Mr. André Freis, Ezra Drew, Esq., Col. Alfred Mordecai, James Duane Pell, Esq., Capt. Stanhope E. Blunt."

CHURCH OF THE SACRED HEART (CATHOLIC).

This parish was formed Dec. 15, 1870, the Most Rev. John McCloskey, Archbishop (now Cardinal) of New York, appointing Rev. T. J. Earley as pastor. This place was attended from Cold Spring up to this date. On taking charge he found a small church, in an out-of-the-way place, dedicated to St. Thomas. After much trouble there was secured in November, 1872, the present site from Mr. Theodore Cozzens for the sum of $5000 cash. The location is the best in this town, elevated several feet above the West Point road, and directly opposite Cozzens' Hotel. The building is Gothic in style, with a spire some 125 feet high. The material used in construction is the granite of this neighborhood for the basement part, which is 13 feet high. The rest of the building is the best of hard brick, with Ohio stone trimmings. Its dimensions, 93 feet long and 46 feet wide. In all respects itself and grounds (about one and one-half acres, which are kept in thorough repair and ornamented with flowers and shrubberies) are the most picturesque in the place. The cost of the church was about $19,000. The building was erected in 1875-76.

In 1876 also was erected a pastoral residence at a cost of over $6000. The pastor has likewise to attend to the spiritual wants of West Point, where there are some 800 Catholics of all ages; the number at this place being about 700; in the whole parish about 1500 or over.

There has been no change in pastor since the foundation of the parish. Everything is in a progressive state at present. There are in the Sunday-schools near 400 children, with teachers sufficient to instruct them.

VIII.—BURIAL-PLACES.

As in all other towns, these possess much interest in the study of the past. Oftentimes one broken, rough stone, with a few initials and a single date, will throw a clear light upon family history or upon more public annals. In other cemeteries patriotic recollections are kindled, and the times that tested a nation's patriotism will be indicated on the records of those who died for their native land. Both these elements commingle in studying the cemeteries of Highlands. The most noted of these is at West Point, on the military grounds.

THE HIGHLAND UNION CEMETERY was incorporated by a certificate executed Feb. 17, 1860. James Denton was chosen chairman of the meeting for organization, and Cornelius Nelson secretary. The trustees named in this instrument were John Denton, Peter C. Regan, Cornelius Nelson, John W. Hall, David Parry, William Avery, James Miller, Isaac Faurot, and Stephen D. Morrison.

This organization laid out with taste and skill a cemetery of ample proportions.

IX.—SOCIETIES.

There is maintained at Highland Falls a lodge of Masons and also one of Odd-Fellows.

WEST POINT.

A former writer described so well and briefly the various charms of this place that we unhesitatingly quote from his article:

"West Point will ever occupy a prominent place in the annals of America. It is intimately connected with the history of our liberty and our existence as an independent nation. At an early period chosen as a military station, it became the stronghold of the army during the Revolution, and was emphatically the Gibraltar of our hopes. The key to New England and the Middle States, it formed one of the greatest barriers to the operations of the British, whose bold and deep-laid plans for its destruction proved their well-grounded conviction of its strength and importance. Had the fiendish machinations of the perjured traitor been crowned with success, a deep, nay fatal blow must have been struck to the cause of freedom. But the God of battles was on the side of the weak and oppressed. He placed in operation those means which crushed the foul plot on the very verge of its denouement, and overwhelmed with disgrace and ignominy those who were lending their aid to its consummation. Never can we be sufficiently grateful for the intervention of Providence in this crisis of affairs, when the dark clouds of adversity which had been gathering from all quarters were just ready to burst upon our devoted heads with all their fury, and render a cause, already desperate, absolutely hopeless. The Genius of Liberty had well-nigh winged its flight to more congenial regions, when, recovering from the shock, it atoned for its momentary reverie by sleepless vigilance, and fixed its abode in these everlasting hills. The footsteps of Washington and Kosciusko have hallowed this spot. About a mile to the north is a beautiful little valley, almost hid by the overhanging hills which lend their deep, cool shade to avert from it the heat of the summer's sun. Its smooth beach is washed by the dark waters of the Hudson, whilst through it flows with gentle murmurs a pure stream of cool water from the deep ravine formed by the surrounding hills. Here was Washington's headquarters, and the retired little spot is at this day known as Washington's Valley. On the east the shore is bold and abrupt, and, even at the present time, wild, well wooded, and picturesque. Many a miniature promontory and retired recess mark the general outline, whilst rock piled upon rock in huge masses gives a wild confusion to the scenery. One spot there is, especially, where the solid granite lifts itself perpendicularly from the river to a great height. About 100 feet from its base it recedes, forming a level space of a few feet in area, when it towers up again till it reaches the table-land above. This natural platform is reached by a long flight of stone steps from above, and is graced with a few shrubs and shade-trees, and a fountain fed by a stream from the adjacent height. This retired and romantic spot when in its original wilderness used to be the favorite resort of Kosciusko whilst stationed at the Point, and is still known as 'Kosciusko's Garden.' On the north the shore is less abrupt, and slopes more gradually towards the river. Bordering on the water's edge is the little village of Camptown, where are quartered the families of the soldiers and laborers connected with the post. The artillery, dragoon, and band barracks are in the immediate vicinity. Near the eastern extremity of this slope is the public wharf, at which all the regular boats land on their passage up and down the river. At this point are stationed the cannon which the cadets use in practicing upon the target about a mile beyond, near Washington's Valley. A very fine road winds along the side of the hill, from the wharf to the plain above. Near the brow of the hill are two large stone stables for the cavalry. A turreted wall of stone masonry also incloses a square area, which is used as a place of storage; a number of pieces of ordnance and various Revolutionary relics are deposited here. Within this space also stand three small stone buildings which are severally used as a laboratory, a blacksmith's, and a joiner's shop. The plain occupies an area of about 80 acres, and in shape is a trapezium of which the two longest sides border upon the river. On the south the table-land continues with more or less undulations to the distance of several miles. In the rear, hill rises upon hill till lost in the loftiest peaks. On one of the highest of these hills, called 'Mount Independence,' stands Fort Putnam, a fortification of no little renown. It was commenced in 1778, and considering the time and circumstances in which it was built, is an immense piece of work. It occupies a large space, and is built of the gneiss rock, though the mortar used in its construction has by its decomposition given it precisely the appearance of limestone. The height of its walls will average about 20 feet: in the rear it abuts upon a precipice of more than 100 feet. Time and the hand of violence have done much to deprive it of its original glory. Already have all the turrets and embrasures gone, and deep chasms are yawning in the main fortification. Several of the large casemates remain entire, whilst but the traces of others are visible. It is a noble ruin, and seems worthy of a better fate than to be suffered thus to crumble away piecemeal in decay. The situation is a commanding one, and the surrounding view is truly grand, comprising as it does the amphitheatre of hills and mountains, the Hudson, and the Point itself, with its smooth green plain, its white tents, and neat edifices. The ruins of numerous smaller fortifications and redoubts are visible from this elevation, the principal of which are Forts Webb and Wyllys. Indeed, every eminence of importance in the neighborhood has its ruins of bastions and ramparts,—incontrovertible witnesses of the 'times that tried men's souls.' North of the Point and above Washington's Valley is the cemetery, a retired spot, on the brow of a bold promontory, and now the resting-place of several cadets and former residents of the post. A number of neat and beautiful monuments adorn the grounds and record the names and virtues of the sleepers beneath. Above and beyond towers, in all its pristine grandeur, stern old Cro' Nest. Rocky and precipitous, it rears its crest 1400 feet above the water at its base. Clothed in majesty, it appears a giant sentinel placed there to guard the peaceful scene within from the din and confusion of the outer world, and to forbid intrusion upon its sacred charge. The view from its summit is surpassingly grand,—nay, enchanting. A panorama comprising every variety of scenery suddenly bursts upon the eye, surprising and bewildering the beholder with its extent, beauty, and sublimity. Time would fail us were we to attempt to enumerate any more than the most important objects of interest in the neighborhood of West Point. Being situated on an elevation of 160 feet, it is not seen to good advantage from the water beneath. On the Southern exposure, however, the hospital, academic building, chapel, and library strike the eye,—all fine edifices, and built principally of stone from the neighboring quarries.

"Near the hotel, and directly above Gee's Point at the bend of the river, is situated Fort Clinton, of which nothing but the mounds, overgrown with turf, now remain. Within its limits is Kosciusko's monument, a neat and simple tribute of respect from the corps of cadets, erected in 1828. Just above Kosciusko's Garden has been recently erected a monument to the memory of Major Dade and his command, who fell in the Florida war. A square block of marble, on which are the inscriptions, rests upon a granite base. At each corner is an upright cannon, supporting a projecting cap. Above this rises a graceful column, surmounted by an eagle with extended pinions, and grasping in his beak a wreath of laurels which encircles the shaft to its base. It is a beautiful piece of sculpture, and forms a striking and picturesque object in the scenery from the water.

"Contiguous to the public lands south of the ceded territory lies the property of Z. J. D. Kinsley, Esq., a graduate of the Military Academy, and for a long time an instructor in the institution. After continuing in the service seventeen years, he resigned his commission in the army, and, retiring to private life, soon after established an academy on his own responsibility. The institution is known as the 'Classical and Mathematical School,' and occupies one of the finest locations amid the highlands. It has no connection with the Military Academy, being entirely independent and separate from it. Standing as it does more than 250 feet above the water, on the brow of one of those wood-crowned heights, midway between the river and the mountain beyond, it possesses a beautiful southern exposure, and a most commanding prospect. The spacious buildings occupy the very site of a Revolutionary fortification, being one of a chain of redoubts extending from Fort Putnam to the river. Thus has its warlike glory passed away, its ramparts have been leveled, and Mars has yielded to Flora, the goddess of flowers and blossoms. In the rear, Fort Wyllys frowns upon it from an over-hanging height, and, now but a wreck of its former grandeur, opposes itself as a barrier to the fury of the northwest blasts which dash against its time-worn bastions. From this site the Hudson assumes the aspect of a natural lake, entirely barricaded from egress at any point by the surrounding hills, which to all appearance form a perfect basin. The powerful steamboat darts from behind a wooded crag, parts the smooth waters with hurried strokes, and in a few moments is lost again to view as if by magic. The snow-white sail issues from the green hills, dashes on in mad career before the favoring breeze, and anon seems disappearing into the caverns of Æolus, the sovereign of the winds. The highlands of the Hudson! What beauty, what variety of picturesque scenery do they present!"

THE GRAVE OF MOLLY PITCHER.

The story of Molly Pitcher has often been told, but yet awakens a stirring and patriotic interest, and cannot be omitted from the history of the present town of Highlands, upon whose soil she lived and died. She was in Fort Clinton at the time of its capture by the British in October, 1777. When the enemy scaled the parapet her husband, who was an artilleryman, dropped his portfire and fled, but Molly caught it up and discharged the last gun fired by the Americans. Nine months afterwards, at the memorable battle of Monmouth, although but twenty-two years of age, she illustrated her devotion to her husband, who was serving a gun, by bringing him water during the action from a neighboring spring. A shot from the enemy killed him at his post, and the officer in command, having no one competent to fill his place, ordered the piece to be withdrawn. Molly saw her husband fall as she came from the spring, and also heard the order. She dropped her bucket, seized the rammer, and vowed she would fill his place at the gun and avenge his death. She performed the duty with a skill and courage which attracted the attention of all who saw her. On the following morning, covered with dirt and blood, Gen. Greene presented her to Gen. Washington, who, admiring her bravery, conferred upon her the appointment of a sergeant. By his recommendation her name was placed upon the half-pay list for life. She is described as a stout, red-haired, freckle-faced young Irishwoman, with a handsome, piercing eye. She was a great favorite in the army, usually appearing with an artilleryman's coat over her dress and wearing a cocked hat.

According to Boynton's history, from which these facts are taken, she must have died young,—not more than thirty-three years old. She was provided for at West Point, as appears from various passages in the letters of Maj. Fleming, addressed to Gen. Knox, then Secretary of War. She lived in the family of Mrs. Swim, and also in that of Mr. Denniston.

FORT MONTGOMERY AND FORT CLINTON,

at the southeast angle of the town, are the principal places of Revolutionary association below West Point. These are mentioned in the General History included in this volume, and are fully described in Lossing's "Field-Book of the Revolution." In fact this whole river front has been the theme of poet, painter, historian, and novelist for a hundred years past. American literature is rich with the materials gathered along these rocky shores, and they need no further illustration in these pages.

XI.—INDUSTRIAL PURSUITS.

The agricultural products of this town can never assume much prominence. There is a small amount only of arable land. This is mostly on the plateau above the high, rocky banks of the river, and in the narrow valleys of the streams. A large portion of the town must always be left to its native wildness, much of the mountain region being too rocky even to constitute grazing lands if they were cleared. The products of the forest have to a limited extent formed an item of industry.

XII.—MILITARY.

The territory now embraced in the town of Highlands was the theatre of stirring events in the war of the Revolution; but this subject is treated with much care in a preceding chapter devoted to Revolutionary history, and need not be repeated here.

WAR OF 1861-65.

The official action which was taken in the war of the Union is given in the history of Cornwall, which Highlands then formed a part. It must be added that these mountain districts poured out their sons liberally for the defense of the government.
